VERY GOOD HOME RECIPE. Says Any One Can Prepare It, and Knows Nothing Better.

Rheumatism is easier to avoid than to cure, states a well-known authority. Every man, woman and child here should dress as warmly as possible, and, above all else, keep the feet dry. Avoid colds and exposure, and don't become constipated.

Rheumatism is strictly a blood disease, caused by inactive kidneys, which, through cold or exposure or improper diet, fail in their duty of filtering the rheumatic poisons from the blood. This poisonous waste matter, uric acid, oxilate of lime, urea, etc., if not strained from the blood promptly, decomposes and settles about the joints and muscles, causing rheumatic disease.

In damp or chilly cold weather the In damp or chilly cold weather the kidneys are made to do double work. The pores of the skin all over the body do not assist in eliminating the poisons of the body, throwing this work to the kidneys, which become clogged and feeble, thus causing not only rheumatism, but all forms of kidney troubles, backache, weak bladder and urinary troubles, and sometimes terrible blood disorders.

At the first sign of any of these troubles the following simple prescription should be mixed and taken in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsa-parilla, three ounces. Any good pharmacy can supply these ingredients, and all the mixing required is to shake well in a bottle.

"CAUGHT IN THE RAIN."
Dick Crawford
Act 1—A street in Denver Col	1

It has grown to be quite the usual thing for the stage comedy with or without musical trimmings to be heralded abroad by the industrious advance agent as a sure and unfailing specific for the "blues," but it isn't always that the indigo mood permits itself to be chased to the woods. Sometimes the barometer, so far from rising, descends until the theatregoer who was merely jaded, discovers himself a prey to severe melancholia, and develops a morbid interest in the sanidade and the stage of the better class. In fact, it verges closely on genuine comedy, with just sufficient of the melodramatic flavor to arouse popular interest. As is only to It has grown to be quite the usual farce comedy, which is the joint work of Mr. Collier and Grant Stewart, a former Toronto newspaperman, would still be amusing, since the dialog is at all times sprightly. It is high grade comedy thruout, with hardly a sentence that is not invested with droll humor and well-turned witticism. more fitting vehicle for Mr. Collier's peculiar fun-making talents might possibly be found, but there is certainly no pressing need to begin a search.

As a natural comedian, Mr. Collier has few peers. His drollness of speech and facial expression have built up for him a well deserved reputation. His methods are unostentatious, and have an ease and unconventionality all their own. The part he plays, that of Dick Crawford, partner in a mining venture, and into whose soul the rustle of skirts strikes mental terror, is one that offers big possibilities for ludi-crously embarrassing situations.

The title of the play has its fitness in the episode of the opening act, where a heavy thunderstorm and downpour of rain, given on the stage downpour of rain, given on the stage with realistic effect, compels the reluctant Crawford to remain for some little time in the society of charming Muriel Mason, daughter of one of Denver's leading citizens. Of course there is mutual affraction, but on the stage, the course of true love is ever blocked with obstructions, How these occur and are removed, it will saturday. these occur and are removed, it will well repay one's while to see.

Special mention should be made of Ellen Mortimer as Muriel comedy of "The White Horse Tavern," Mason, a role played with freshness and girlish charm; Helena Collier Garrick, as Mrs. Merriden, the volatile matron; Albert Perry as James Maxwell, a brusque and somewhat unserupulous type of the hard-headed western promoter; Richard Sterling, as Bob Livingstone, the young clubman of grafting propensities, and John Sowville as Mr. Mason, and Reginald Mason as Bryce Forrester, the tourist,

Act 3—The kitchen of the same, next evening.
Act 4—A maple sugar shed in a New Hampshire forest, early next morning.

"Way Down East" has been seen here every season for many years, but it still retains its hold on the theatregoing public. There is not a better pastoral play on the road, and as long as it is kept up to the high standard in point of scenic arrangement and competent cast it will continue to draw large houses wherever tinue to draw large houses wherever presented. The audience at the Grand presented. The audience at the Grand last night was just as large and just as enthusiastic as in previous years.

The story is too well known to refer to the plot of the play, but there is considerable that can be said of the cast. Miss Phoebe Davies, who created the role of "Afina Moore," was the principal of the company last night, and was supported by Robert Fischer as the "Squire" and a number of the original company. Miss Davies throws entirely new light on the character. She secures effects tremendously impressive, making one feel that it is a person who really has lived. The supporting company is made up of finished actors, and there is no part too small to be well played.
