

An Absolute Cure for Rheumatism

If the skin or bowels are unhealthy, they won't throw off enough urea. This urea is changed into uric acid—carried by the blood to the nerves—and causes Rheumatism.

Fruit-a-lives surely cure Rheumatism and Sciatica because they act directly on bowels, kidneys and skin—and so strengthen and invigorate these organs that there is no urea and uric acid retained in the system to irritate the nerves and bring Rheumatism, Sciatica and Neuralgia.

"Fruit-a-lives" are intensified fruit juices with tonics and intestinal antiseptics added.

SUMMER COMPLAINT.

One of the Commonest and Most Dangerous of Diseases.

Everyone Should be Prepared for it with a Bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Very few people escape an attack of Summer Complaint. It may be slight, or it may be severe, but nearly everyone is liable to it.

You cannot tell when it seizes on you, how it may end.

Let it go for a day or two only, and see how weak and prostrated it will leave you.

There is only one safe way to cure it and that is by Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It has been on the market for sixty-two years and has been proved and tried so you are not experimenting when you buy it.

Do not accept a substitute or imitation, as many of these are positively dangerous to life and health. Insist on having Dr. Fowler's.

Mrs. Norman H. Eisau, Ship Harbor, N.S., writes: "Last summer my baby was very bad with Summer Complaint. I tried most everything for him, but nothing seemed to help. One day a neighbor called in and told me to try Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, so I got a bottle and after a few doses my baby was cured. I shall always keep it in the house."

SEARCHED BRITAIN FOR PRETTY GIRL

Chance Train Meeting Sets Millionaire on Romantic Search.

London, Aug. 5.—An American millionaire is searching throughout the length and breadth of the British Isles for a beautiful young English girl, with whom he fell in love at first sight when he met her in a railway carriage between Newhaven and London.

The millionaire, who is connected with a flourishing commercial enterprise in Georgia, U.S.A., desires to keep his name a secret for obvious reasons, but of his earnestness in the search for a lovely face there is no doubt.

The romance is over a year old, for it was on April 16, 1906, that the millionaire, with two ladies and a gentleman, traveled from Paris to London, via Dieppe and Newhaven. They left the French capital by the nine a.m. train after an extended European tour.

At Newhaven, when with the members of his party, he was taking train for London, two young ladies, evidently sisters, entered the carriage. For a time they read, but presently conversation became general, and the new-comers stated that they were returning from Malta, where they had been spending the winter.

The millionaire was greatly charmed by the grace and beauty of the younger of the two sisters, and, although he saw her for so short a time—for at Victoria the two parties bade each other good-bye, and have never met since—she has never ceased to occupy his thoughts, and his agents are now searching throughout the United Kingdom to ascertain her address.

The search is made difficult by the fact that there are practically no clues to the lady's identity. "I can give but a poor description of this girl who fascinated me so," says the millionaire in a letter published by the Daily Express. "That is to be accounted for by the fact that I was not aware of the fascination until we were about to part."

The Prettiest Eyes. "To the best of my recollection, she was about 5 ft. 6 in. high. Weighed, I should think, about 125 lb. Dark brown hair. Beautiful dark blue eyes. I am not certain as to the color of the eyes, but they were of the prettiest type, and so I conclude they must have been blue. I think her dress was a checked gray traveling suit. Both sisters were dressed alike."

"I recall quite a little merriment," he proceeds, "as during our conversation in the train we began to compare ourselves with European travel, and the young lady asked about the cow-catchers (pilots) a more correct name for them) attached to our engines. She wanted to know if the cow-catcher caught up the cow and carried it in safety to the next station."

"As we neared London one of the ladies in our party asked them if they were going to stop in London. One of the girls replied: 'Oh, no. We are going to Blackheath tonight.'"

"At Victoria we left the girls standing near the compartment from which we alighted. A little later, while near the baggage-car identifying our baggage, they came close to us again. Here I had an opportunity to look at a violin-case the young lady was carrying, and read the name 'Irene Walker,' with some address scratched out. However, I could read through the scratches the word 'Malta.'"

"So we left them still watching for their baggage. Miss Irene had a beautiful, bright complexion, regular features, a pretty mouth, and lovely white teeth."

"Thus we met and thus we parted—my heart beating quite a tempest, and wondering what it all meant, and if we should ever meet again. Perhaps so. But will she ever again seem to me as she did on that night as the darkness of London separated us—one of the purest, sweetest, most attractive creatures that God has ever blessed this old earth with?"

Famous Detective at Work. Every plan that the minds of the most expert investigators could devise has been adopted to try to trace the girl with whom the millionaire became so strangely and overpoweringly fascinated. So far, however, these efforts have been entirely fruitless.

The case has been placed in the hands of Mr. John Sweeney, formerly one of the most expert detectives at Scotland Yard.

As Miss Irene Walker was evidently a violin player, inquiries have been made at all the schools of music in London and the suburbs, but no trace has been found of any pupil, either past or present, who answers to her description.

So far as the millionaire can remember, the girl would have been about eighteen or nineteen years old. Mr. Sweeney has accordingly searched the registers at Somerset House and obtained birth certificates of all the Irene Walkers who were born between fifteen and thirty years ago. The tracing of these had led the investigators a romantic chase all over the United Kingdom.

A titled lady with a daughter named Irene was found near London. She answered very closely to the millionaire's description, but her mother, who was greatly amused at the story, declared that she was not traveling on the day in question.

What seemed a likely clue was discovered in Devonshire, where two sisters were found, one of whom was named Iris, who had been traveling on the Continent about April of last year. Her parents were diplomatically approached, when the discovery was made that Iris Walker was just about to be married. She was much interested in the story of the millionaire's fascination, but stated that she had no recollection of any such incident.

Now that all other efforts have failed, the millionaire's agents in this country have decided to resort to publicity in the hope that the facts of the case will be read by the girl herself, and that when she knows of the deep admiration she may communicate with him through the press. "All this procedure," the millionaire states in a letter to his brother-in-law, "makes me feel a little foolish, especially when I consider that perhaps after all the girl may not be what I thought she was. Nevertheless I guess it's worth the effort, and the romantic part of it all appeals to me."

SCOTCHMAN PROVED AN EASY VICTIM

How a Fake Prize Fighter Parted Him From His Money.

Glasgow, Aug. 5.—From the north of England comes a story of the amazing credulity of the sterner, as well as the fairer sex—a story which has actually caused amazement here in Scotland. It was not regarded as possible that the north of England people could be so ignorant in regard to Scottish affairs.

According to the accounts received here George Mosely, a young man of pleasing appearance was placed under arrest on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. Even preliminary examination was of such a character that his own solicitor described him as "a liar of great fertility and picturesqueness."

Robert Groves, a bird dealer of Ancoats said Mosely told him that he could make him a "star" member of a Scottish club and high lieutenant of Scotland. Mosely described himself as the hero of many prize fights, and even went so far as to appoint Groves as his trainer. Acting on these representations Groves handed his business over to Mosely and also gave him considerable money.

The ceremony of the election to the club was gone through in secret and all of the supposed rites were observed except that of burning or branding the body, this being waived as a special consideration of Groves having a scar on his face which could be counted as a burn.

Groves provided Mosely with the best of foods while he was training for a forthcoming prize fight and also boxed with him daily to keep him in training. The fact that he persisted in eating so much in the way of spring lamb and new potatoes, and drinking the finest of wines and the oldest of ales, while it did not arouse the suspicion of the poor dupe, did arouse the suspicion of some of the neighbors who knew enough about the training of prize fighters to know that this was hardly the best way to go about it.

Even then Mosely attempted to bluff and fight the matter to a finish, but the notoriety aroused in consequence resulted in his ultimate undoing.

Was No Laggard in Love. Emily Groves, the sister of Robert Groves, said that Mosely made the most violent love to her and told her that he had already won 132 fights and that he was matched to fight Gunner Moir.

"I really do like brave men," she said, "and I thought that he must be very brave to win so many fights. And I knew that brave men are honest and truthful, and could not see how one so brave could tell me a falsehood. I never thought of calling into question the truth of his statements for this reason."

Mosely told the girl that he would receive $40,000 in connection with his fight with Gunner Moir, and that of this $15,000 would go to her brother for playing the part of trainer. Moir when interviewed declared that he had never heard of Mosely.

Nor was this all. He declared that he was writing a play, "A Woman's Sin." The play purported to be a dramatization of an alleged novel written by Sir Walter Scott, also entitled "A Woman's Sin." Mosely informed her that they were to be married with the royalties from this peculiar dramatization. Miss Groves said that she never thought to investigate and find out whether Sir Walter Scott ever did write the novel, because she had absolute confidence in the man.

However, as a mere matter of detail and common sense, she did insist on having some money before the marriage, and except for the money furnished by her brother, it is seen that Mosely was without funds.

Mosely's solicitors declared that this was all done to win the woman's favor, but the magistrate finally sentenced the "prize fighter" and "playwright" to three months in jail.

In France the servant question has reached a very acute stage. In 10 years the supply of woman domestics has decreased by some 200,000 individuals. "But," says a Frenchman, "though now fewer than formerly, those that remain to us are certainly greater in efficiency."

With Women, It's Looks First

The average woman considers her looks first, her health afterwards. That's why we hear of so many cases of broken health and nervous prostration. She wears furs and heavy garments on a cool afternoon; in the evening, with the thinnest kind of gown, she attends the theater or party.

These foolish irregularities in dress reap their own reward in suffering. It is only when colds that lead to pneumonia result that she gets frightened and seeks a remedy that restores health.

Let her take Ferrozene! It soon gives vigor to the body, quickly brings color to the cheeks, rests the nerves and strengthens. Ferrozene sharpens appetite, invigorates digestion, adds weight; it gives the muscles tone and elasticity that makes the ailing one feel young, strong and vigorous.

If you want strength, good color, high spirits and energy, use Ferrozene. It's the most nourishing tonic made; sold everywhere in 50c boxes.

THE MYSTERIES OF DREAD CANCER

Report of the Research Fund Presented at a London Meeting.

London, Aug. 5.—The report of the Imperial cancer research fund for the year 1906-7, presented to the general committee at its meeting under the presidency of the Prince of Wales, is attracting unusual attention in medical circles. The general summary of the superintendent, Dr. Bashford, states that "during the past year the hopes of advancing knowledge of cancer have become more and more centered in experimental investigations. We have learned from experiments more of the nature of the local and constitutional conditions associated with the origin of cancer, and we have been able to form more definite conceptions of the nature of the change responsible for the rapid multiplication of cancer cells." The earlier conclusions that cancer is universal in vertebrate animals, without reference to their food; that its prevalence differs greatly in extent among different races of men; that it is frequently developed in parts of the body which are subjected to continued irritation; that it is often consecutive to some direct local injury, and that no single form of external agency is constantly associated with its development have all been confirmed by subsequent observation and experiment.

On these grounds it is pronounced futile to seek for a hypothetical something common to all the external agencies associated with cancer, and it is necessary to direct attention to the common intracellular change which, in conformity with the biological similarity of cancer throughout the vertebrates, must intervene in the transformation of normal into cancerous tissue. As there is no evidence to justify the assumption that the disease is communicated from one person to another, the search for the clue to cancer except that of burning or branding the body, this being waived as a special consideration of Groves having a scar on his face which could be counted as a burn.

In this direction an inquiry into the possible influence of an inherited tendency holds a prominent place, and the report shows this inquiry to be far more difficult and more complicated than frequently unsuspected sources of error than might at first be supposed. The average person who has met with more than one case of cancer in a family has no doubt at all upon the subject, but the figures of the registrar general's reports show that two men out of every eight who attain the age of thirty-five will be likely to die of cancer, and hence that a cancerous strain in the ancestry is much more common than is generally supposed.

When Lieut. George Elyson, her chief aid, attempted to prevent 10-year-old Willie Miller from rolling in a faint on the floor, Mrs. Ladd ordered her to assist him. What influence she used has puzzled more than one Des Moines doctor.

In a room with a low ceiling, 24x30 feet, and containing three windows, these curious worshippers gathered. When 300 persons are crowded in the place the heat makes it intolerable to remain. Not so with the converts. Perspiration pouring from every part of their skin, these religion-crazed men, women and children work themselves into a frenzy.

Mrs. Lila Miller, while in a trance, became the wife of George Sturges. When she recovered she ran two blocks to the river bridge nearby and back, and sank fainting on the floor, muttering: "O God, deliver me from this." Soon after she fell into a trance lasting three days. When she became herself she was able to speak in African language, and with her husband will go to the Dark Continent to do missionary work.

Miss Prudence Van Gilder, a pretty music teacher, lay in a trance for 30 days. She was unable to speak in all that time. Food was forced through her locked teeth by a tube. Hundreds of people visited her in her cot. But when she spoke it was in an unknown tongue. No one could understand her. Two weeks later, while attending a meeting, she was again stricken. Her body was as rigid and hard as marble, and it required the efforts of six strong men to carry her slight form to her home.

All efforts to stop the meetings proved futile. Finally Harry Gael swore out a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Ladd on the charge of disturbing the peace. When an officer went to her palatial home in the fashionable part of the city to serve it she was not in.

Then the matter was brought to the attention of Judge Ladd. He professed ignorance of the whole affair, and said it was not his intention to interfere with anyone's religious beliefs. When the accounts of the proceedings were given him he demanded proofs, and went white to the lips when they were supplied. In a carefully worded statement he said: "If his wife was guilty of wrongdoing she would be punished to the limit of the law. Should a medical examination show her mind to be deranged he would send her to the hospital. But should she appear in sound mind and still persist in her course, a divorce, he declared, was the only conclusion."

The latest returns for the metropolitan police show that there were last year 50,000 men and women over 60 years of age in the London workhouses. Of these, 12,016 were between 65 and 70 years of age; 12,211 were between 70 and 75 years of age; 8,200 were between 75 and 80 years of age, and 6,166 were over 80 years of age.

The returns omit the most picturesque figures—those of inmates between 90 and 100, or over 100, but I believe that there are several centenarian workhouse inmates in London.

In the course of observations on a farm at Markstown, Cullybackey, County Antrim, Ireland, workmen came upon two large cavities, were said to have been subterranean dwellings before the introduction of Christianity. They were built of unburnt stones, their entrances of such narrow dimensions as to protect the inhabitants from any danger of invasion. The cavities discovered consisted of a series of chambers, each measuring about 20 feet long and 5 feet high, all being perfectly formed.

WOMAN'S POWER IS STARTLING

Head of Strange Sect Wields an Uncanny Influence—Terrible Rites.

Des Moines, Iowa, Aug. 5.—Getting celestial guidance in their love affairs—a virtual marriage in heaven—is the latest addition to the many strange things in the cult that Mrs. Scott M. Ladd, wife of Chief Justice Ladd, of the Iowa supreme court, heads and fosters. A "power" so odd and mysterious as to baffle the best experts of the city yields its influence over the destinies of a sect that has no equal in the United States.

Suddenly jumping up in the midst of a stirring meeting, John Brewer exclaimed: "Oh, Lord, lead me to Mrs. Clyde Miller, whom the spirit tells me to marry."

"Glory!" shouted Mrs. Miller. "My heart has left my body, and it tells me to become the wife of John Brewer."

Took Spook's Advice. Within six hours a license was procured, and within the same precincts on the mission house the couple were married while the congregation stood and shouted their blessings for the ceremony proceeded. Mrs. Miller is, incidentally, the possessor of twelve different languages, gained through the "power" she received in meetings and at various other times and ways. But her experiences are no different than those of the thirty other disciples of the religious body.

Morning and rolling on the floor, going into trances that last for hours and being able to speak with no apparent training the languages of foreign races, these, in brief, are some of the "manifestations" that come to the followers of Mrs. Ladd's queer mission.

Her converts do not see anything unnatural in their departure from the ordinary methods of religious awakening, and are utterly indifferent to the charges of cruelty that are being preferred against them. Even the arrest of Mrs. Ladd on the charge of disturbing the public peace did not serve to break up the work of the enthusiasts. In fact, when she returned from her enforced leave of absence, scores of her people met her at the depot and escorted her through the streets of Des Moines to the mission house, shouting and praying.

When Lieut. George Elyson, her chief aid, attempted to prevent 10-year-old Willie Miller from rolling in a faint on the floor, Mrs. Ladd ordered her to assist him. What influence she used has puzzled more than one Des Moines doctor.

A CRITICAL PERIOD

Intelligent Women Prepare Dangers and Pain of This Critical Period Avoided by the Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

How many women realize that the most critical period in a woman's existence is the change of life, and that the anxiety felt by women as this time draws near is not without reason?

If her system is in a deranged condition, or she is predisposed to prophy of any organ, it is at this time likely to become active and, with a host of nervous irritations, make life a burden.

At this time, also, cancers and tumors are more liable to begin their destructive work. Such warning symptoms as a sense of suffocation, hot flashes, disordered head, dizziness, impending evil, sounds in the ears, timidity, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period of life when woman's great change may be expected.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the world's greatest remedy for women at this trying period.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound invigorates and strengthens the female organism, and builds up a nervous system as no other medicine can.

Madame Louis Belleau of 17 Ramsay St., Quebec, Que., writes: "Dear Mrs. Pinkham: "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound assisted me to pass the change of life with but very little sickness and pain, and I am pleased to give it my endorsement, for I feel sure that if I had not taken your Vegetable Compound I should not have passed the climax safely. I took it off and on for two years and now find that I am as splendid as I was when I first began to take it, and better than I did ten years ago. Much praise to your medicine, and may all suffering women learn of its value."

For special advice regarding this important period, women are invited to write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. She is a daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years has been advising sick women free of charge. Her advice is free and always helpful to ailing women.

3 YEARS IN BED WITH RHEUMATISM! NOW WELL

It is simply marvelous, the effect Bu-Ju has on Rheumatism. It not merely relieves the pain but completely rids the system of the disease. Bu-Ju, THE GENTLE KIDNEY PILLS, does this, because it cures the kidneys.

"Was an invalid for 3 years with inflammatory Rheumatism, and was bed fast until about 6 months ago, when a friend left me some Bu-Ju Pills. I was helpless as an infant. I continued taking them, and now I am able to get out of bed, dress myself, and walk without crutches."
