PORTABLE CLINIC IN TORONTO SCHOOLS

Total Dental Operations Last Year.
64,730—Fifty-one per cent.
Have Dental Defects

(Toronto Star) Prevention is now the keynote of the dental work that is being done in the Toronto public schools.
It is only a few years ago since the condition of children's teeth in Toronto was so bad that 95 per cent. were found to have dental defects. This has been reduced to a percentage of 31. Still Dr.
Wallace Scembrace, chief dental officer, is not satisfied, and he now has a portable clinic making the rounds of the schools which have no clinic of their own.
No children need be missed.
The board of education has declined to take up the work of making irregular teeth straight. This is a natural follow-up process to the prophylactic work and the treatment given the teeth that are diseased. But Dr. Scembrace and his staff have gone as far as they can go with the funds at their disposal.
Dr. Scembrace, in his annual report, just issued, says:
"At present the city is divided into fifteen dental districts, with one dental center in each. An ideal arrangement would be to have a dental clinic in each school, thus saving a large portion of the loss of the child's time from classroom work, and also enabling better control and follow-up service. Under the present system all of the scholars treated in over 90 per cent of the schools
