A Change of Attitude

A. E. Manning Foster has published an anthology of what the world's greatest writers, poets and philosophers have thought about death. "One of the many changes due to the war," he says in his preface, "is the alteration in our attitude to death. It is no longer a subject to be mentioned only with bated breath or to be decorously hidden out of sight. With the fact of it so close to us it is impossible to ignore it or pretend that we are not thinking about it. Most of us can think of it with better heart and more bravely than we could in the past. Much of the language of the poets has passed into the prose of our lives."

AN OLD THEORY

which taught us to believe that eye troubles were wholly caused by organic diseases of some part of the human body is now succeeded by the fact that eye-strain is the direct cause of a great many organic diseases. We conduct examinations by the most modern methods taught by the best colleges of today.

Major Fallis' Lecture

In an excellent lecture in Centenary church last night a crowded audience heard Major G. O. Fallis refute the many rumors prevalent at the present time as to the laxity of the Canadian soldier's morals in England. He said that there were moral problems in England, but that the Canadians' standard of manhood was of the highest.
