They made a splendid appearance.
They marched to the Queen's rink, where two barouches laden with flowers were joined in the line. The march to the cemetery was then begun, the 62nd Fusiliers band playing the knights on the way. Large numbers of people lined the route of procession. Several graves of knights at the Methodist burying ground and the Church of England burying ground were decorated first, and then at Fernhill the main ceremony was gone through. Here several hundreds of people assembled to assist in the ceremony. When the graves had been decorated the company to the graves of the dead. Since last memorial service Mr. James R. Ruel, president of the cemetery, passed away. He took a great interest in beautifying the City of Sleep on the hill. All are glad to know that the gentleman chosen to succeed him is continuing the work, assisted by the superintednent and others they are making it more beautiful; but a visitor, looking upon the green mounds covering those they love, feel as sad as ever and as they think of them the tear drops as it did before.

The thoughts that come to visitors here are different to those they have in other places. Many think of the home as it was with those in it, who are now sleeping in these narrow houses, and the home as it is without them, and there may be some who as they turn over the pages of the city of the dead. Old father time deals kindly with him and his old friends see to a higher and better life; but it is not, there is too much enmity, hatred, selfishness, jealousy and pride. The practice of these eparates friend from friend, and the gulf between them gots wider and wider, the distance greater and greater; they are always drawing farther apart and too often they are the cause of making the freind of today the foe of tomorrow. As Pythians it is anyone; they were in deep thought and wanted to be alone for a little while; perhaps the closing scenes were again passing before them, and they once more realled the advice of a good kind father or the carnest entreaties of a loving mother. The sound of the parting words still lingers in their ears. Perhaps they looked over the course they had taken and as they compared it with that advised by the compared it with the c upon; perhaps they were not satisfied and realizing the great difference, they seemed given in that book of books, which lies

STOUT PEOPLE'S FEET.

The becoming hands no longer we behold.

No voice we hear however intent we harken,
For night has closed the sunset gates of their feet. They swell and ache, get sore and tender, chafe readily, and tire easily. There is nothing will give such comfort to these people as FOOT ELM. It reduces the swelling, eases the aching, prevents Always ask for FOOT ELM and refuse any substitute that may be offered. Price 25c. a box at all druggists, or by Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.
