PLUMBERS AND PIPEFITTERS NEW HOME, PHASE I
... part of the $40 million building expansion since 1958

U of A expansion continues

The University of Alberta will undergo extensive face change before it reaches its peak enrolment of 18,000 students.

Some will probably still label it the ugliest university in North America, but visitors during the next years will have a great deal more to judge from than you see today.

Student living and eating facilities will be greatly extended and some of the residences and dining rooms which have existed since the earliest days of the university will be torn down.

A third residence tower will rise behind Lister Hall. Its facilities are to be co-educational—a housing first for U of A.

Married students on campus will have the opportunity of university housing as well. Construction of their 18-storey housing complex is to begin this spring on the university farm at 116 Street and 68 Avenue. The complex will consist of 300 apartment-style units.

CO-OP HOUSING

Co-operative student housing is in experimental stages this year but U of A's co-operative residence committee plans to expand co-op housing within the next few years to make such facilities available to a great number of students. Committee chairman Glenn Sinclair said the group plans to obtain five or six homes in the university area to begin operation next fall. The basement of one of the homes will be converted into a large dining hall.

Co-operative residences are student-planned and financed. Meals and rooms are provided at rates lower than those of university owned residences because under the co-op plan, student residents do their own work.

Existing university residences are to undergo removal of the dehumanizing aspects of institutional living. The "humanizing process" will probably mean new color schemes, carpeting, new paintings, and more furniture for the residences.

BOOZE IN RES

Students living on campus may soon experience a relaxation of residence regulations. Liquor in residence may be allowed—for students over 21, of course.

Ye Olde Hotte Caffee, an old bungalow-style cafeteria which has long provided home-cooked meals for university students and staff, will be torn down when cafeteria facilities in the new students' union building are completed.

A new cafeteria will be built on Saskatchewan Drive across from the Tory Building, and it is expected that the area will become a central point on campus as the university expands into the North Garneau area.

Of great interest to students is the new students' union building, now under construction across the street from the old SUB. The building was entirely student-planned and is largely student-financed. Its facilities will include a bookstore, a music listening room, an art gallery, food services, sports facilities, a meditation area, and a theatre.

HEALTH COMPLEX

One of the most exciting projects at U of A is the Health Sciences Complex, a series of buildings and facilities to be completed over the next eight to ten years. The complex will incorporate the existing University Hospital and faculty of medicine and will provide services for patient care, medical education, and research in the fields of dentistry, nursing, rehabilitation medicine, clinical services, basic medical sciences, bacteriology, pathology, and pharmacy.

"When all components of the centre are in operation, it will provide a range and quality of health services on a scale now unavailable in any medical institution in the world", said minister of public health Dr. J. Donovan Ross.

The Health Sciences Complex is said to be the largest architectural undertaking of its kind in Canada. Construction will likely begin on a small scale this spring.

The university will get new chemistry, physics, computing sciences, and math buildings.

The department of mining and metallurgy is to have a new $6,000,000 home behind Assiniboia Hall. The building will also accommodate chemical and petroleum engineering, technical services, and electronic shops. Assiniboia Hall will be torn down to make room for the building.

To relieve shortage in library facilities, Cameron Library will get a new north wing.

GARNEAU EXPANSION

The university's proposed expansion into the North Garneau area will occur in three stages.

Stage I will be bounded by 88 Ave. and Saskatchewan Drive and 111 and 112 St. It will consist of buildings to accommodate the faculties of law, agriculture, arts, and commerce as well as cafeteria facilities.

Stage II is to consist of a fine arts centre and an additional residence. Its western and eastern boundaries will be 111 and 110 St.

Stage III is still in the long-range planning stage, but it is expected the plans will include a parkade for 5,000 to 6,000 cars.
