

STUDENT DISCIPLINE

The S.D.C., which has been in force since first approved by the Board of Governors in 1980, provides students with a means of self-discipline. It is not a replacement for the laws governing the community as a whole, but an alternative whereby the University has recognized the special environment it creates and has developed its own Code accordingly.

The Campus Police, a student organization, has the main responsibility for enforcing the Code. Infractions total will surpass the $20000 mark.

"I wouldn't be surprized if it did," she said.

The Frosh Ball is tomorrow night, so Frosh don't take off those cumbersome orange bracelets yet! The ball will be held in the Sub Ballroom and will feature the local top 40 band Excel. This is also when the prizes for past events will be given out, the Frosh King and Queen crowned, and the winning group receive its GREAT prizes. You have to be present to receive your prize, so make sure you're there and finish off Orientation Week with a bang!

are reported to the Student Disciplinary Committee - all students - who are empowered under the Code to hold hearings and apply sanctions (penalties) on those found guilty of offences. The Code clearly lists the offences covered, including drinking under age or in unauthorized places, assault or disorderly conduct, damage to property, theft, refusal to show student identification to a C.P., obstruction of C.P., falsification or misuse of an I.D. card, and obtaining meals by unlawful means. The sanctions include fines up to $200.00, restitution for damage, suspension of social privileges and recommendation for suspension or dismissal from the University.

During the 1987-88 academic year forty students were found guilty (a few more than once) of under-age drinking or other alcohol-related offenses. A further sixteen were found guilty of falsifying their I.D. cards in order to obtain a drinking stamp. Fines in most cases were $25.00. It is hoped that the new requirement of N.B.L.C.C. cards will reduce the number of offences related to under-age drinking.

To maintain the privilege of a blanket liquor license, the University must ensure that the Province's liquor laws are scrupulously enforced: students are asked to cooperate by following the rules.

Students were also found guilty of other offenses, including obstruction of C.P.'s, damage to property, misuse of fire protection equipment, failure to identify themselves to C.P.'s or Security, and assault. Fines for these offenses ranged from $25.00 to $75.00.

The Code also provides for an appeal mechanism to the Board of Deans, which, under the University Act, has a special responsibility for discipline.

The Code establishes a Supervisory Board, which includes representatives from the Board of Governors and from student groups, a Commissioner for Student Discipline (the University Secretary), who is "responsible for the implementation and administration of the Code", and a Technical Advisor, who is usually a member of the Faculty of Law. It also details the membership of the Student Disciplinary Committee and the procedures to be followed in the laying of charges and conduct of hearings.
