which he

the duties and so conexcellent ext to enough I laall of this riefly, yet statal conge of the latence of the latence of the latence of the obligations amented e fall of in that of His s of this or envy, ers and evail in v, that er upon deteflofs of in its of the of the bitious ambitious or cruel warrior, and raises nation against nation, in all the horrors of strife, of envy, of contention and of bloodshed.—It is the loss of this, the divinest trait of divine perfection, which, in all ages hath filled the church with controversies and persecutions; and stained it with its cruel crimes of martyrdom and banishment.—It is the loss of this essence of the Divinity which breaketh the samily compact, and sindeth to the man enemies in his own house.

In short, it is the loss of this characteristic of the Divine Nature, (i. e.) love, from the human heart, which embitters where they are embittered, every connection of human life;—makes every bosom at times loath its own sensations; and totally unsits us for the enjoyment of the beatistic vision of God; and the more or less we want and neglect the cultivation of this essence of the Divine perfections, so the more or less shall we ever be like Cain of old, fruitless wanderers after happiness over the earth, and in the sight of God, detested vagabonds in the world.

Son of the morning, how art thou fallen! created in the image of God, ornamented according to thy decree, with all the amicableness of that Divine persection, love; by which alone that Great Supreme manifests to, and glorisies all his persections towards, all his inferior creation—but now alas! thro' the fall of man in paradise, deprived of this lovely nature; and by this deprivation

Public Archives of House Books HALLFAX, O. E.