Jim Hadley is spending a short holiday on the bar.

Large flocks of ducks are being seen daily flying across the Eau.

Miss Flora McGeorge and her friend, Miss Robinson, who have been visiting Mrs. James Glenn, returned to Chatham on Saturday.

A bevy of young ladies spent a very enjoyable evening at Drumtochty, Lodge on Saturday, the occasion being a "Linen Shower," given in honor of Miss Otley McGregor, prior to her marriage on Wednesday. After the guests arrived the hostess, Mrs. W. D. Samson, provided each with pencil and paper and requested her to write a short poem about the linen gift she had brought. Among those present were—Mrs. W. Hall, Mrs. Gaukel, Mrs. Stevenson, Misses Cora Putnam, Lily McGregor, Clara Morgan, Vester, E. Abram, Nita Crookshank, Gertrude Johnston, Ethel Titus.

Some of the cottagers say that if Herr Andre, the celebrated Arctic explorer, is ever urgently in need of a thoroughly experienced recruit, all he will have to do is send a rush cablegram to that enterprising young business man and well known athlete, W. J. Kenny.

Mr. Kenny's claim to distinction along lines of Polar atmospheric endurance was established beyond peradventure on Saturday evening. Celebrity was thrust upon him, as it were.

There are certain things pertaining to the inner man that are said to preserve greater refreshing stimulant by being husbanded upon ice, and when Joseph answered re-valley, if you please, and fell in upon his nightly vigil in the direction of the ice-house, his many friends expressed marked cordiality and said several complimentary things.

But Joe was wary and proceeded on his mission alone. Reaching the ice-house, and having borrowed the key thereof, he entered and proceeded to secure the necessary commodity. He was about to depart when startled by the sudden advent of a sleuth-like quadruped—a study in black and white—that sniffed and scouted somewhat ominously.

The appearance of the skunk had an immediate influence on the manoeuvres and evolutions of the ice-seeker. He sought—and sought rapidly. J. W. White never moved more quickly. In the twinkling of an eye Joe had become the most elevated and yet most modest man imaginable. He was up on the highest ice pile and crowded into the remotest corner. There was nothing forward about him in cultivating new acquaintanceships.

For a full half hour matters remained in statu quo. The unwelcome visitor showed no signs of taking a hint, and the young man rapidly melting into the ice with coat-collar turning up and blue nose and ears, endeavored to keep himself from freezing by a series of vocal gymnastics. Alas, the friends of a few moments ago had deserted and the zephyrs alone answered his strenuous shouts.

But Joe is athletic. At the end of the first hour he was butting his anatomy vigorously against the distant end of the ice-house. Constant dropping wears away a stone," and finally, the end of the ice-house gave. Joe went with it—and, 'tis said, he hid himself with alacrity.
