WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS PLEASE MENTION THE GUIDE

ing a large sign showing its merits or demerits, the whole being an admirable demonstration of the fact that poorly-bred animals are unprofitable to a concerned—seller, buyer and consumer—while, on the other hand, money invested in pure breeds, even at higher initial cost, will deliver dividends.

In one pen are shown two Aberdeen Angus two-year-old steers, each weighing 1,085 pounds. Their beef is worth seven and one-half cents a pound, and the animals are worth $78.75 a head. They are well bred, yield good beef and are in great demand on account of their superior quality and good condition. They show that a small landowner, with good stock, can develop good beef and command top prices. In a pen opposite these is a pair of Mexican steers, eight years old and weighing only 750 pounds each. Their beef is worth only five and one-half cents a pound, and the steers $41.25 a head. They are of poor quality, yield poor beef. If purchased cheaply and pastured on cheap range they may prove a poor speculation, but they are not suitable for a feed lot or for a small farmer.

Adjoining the Aberdeen Angus are two roan Shorthorn steers, two years old, weighing 1,115 pounds, worth seven and one-quarter cents a pound and $80.85 a head. They are well-bred young steers with good quality beef. Across from these, and in strong contrast, are some mixed breeds, absolutely without pedigree, four years old, weighing 1,060 pounds. They have been ranged four years, and fed five months in corrals on barley and alfalfa, but they are poor figuring cattle, with poor quality meat, giving poor net results for all who handle them, from producer to consumer.

In another pen are shown three-year-old Hereford steers, weighing 1,325 pounds, worth seven cents a pound and $92.75 a head. They are profitable cattle, giving good quality beef, and will dress seven per cent. more beef than the Mexicans.

In other pens are shown highly-bred sheep and hogs side by side with poor-bred ones, with statistics indicating the relative values.

CANKERWORMS

Cankerworms did a great deal of damage to tree foliage in many districts in the West this year. To prevent a recurrence of this pest Norman Criddle, field representative of the Dominion Entomological Division, gives advice as follows:

The adult female cankerworms are wingless moths, which emerge from pupae formed in the ground. There are two kinds in Manitoba, the Fall Cankerworm and Spring Cankerworm. The latter, however, is generally quite rare, and is found only in the spring. The former is the one responsible for so much damage recently and appears in October.

Cankerworm moths, after emerging make their way to the nearest tree trunk, which they proceed to climb until reaching the branches, where they deposit their eggs. The said eggs, after remaining in position thruout the winter, give forth minute caterpillars (worms) just as the leaves are appearing the following spring.

Various remedial measures have been devised for combating cankerworms, but by far the most efficient are those which prevent the female moths from reaching the trees' branches. These methods usually take the form of using some sticky substance, applied as a band near the trees' base, some preparation of tar being employed. By far the best of these, however, so far as I am aware, is a preparation known as Tree Tanglefoot, manufactured by the O. & W. Thum Co., Grand Rapids, Mich. This not only catches all the moths attempting to crawl over it, but retains its stickiness for a long time, so that, as a rule, but one application is necessary.

As cankerworm moths begin to appear in October, it is at that time that the mixture should be applied as bands to the trees. (Usually the fifteenth of the month is soon enough, but to be on the safe side it is advisable to prepare for a possible earlier appearance by applying the preparation not later than the tenth and keeping it in effective condition until November frosts make this no longer necessary.
