T is a very painful business,' said Mrs. Wetherell, with a pained expression. Are you not sure that there is not some con place explanation, Lady Vaux?

'I am afraid that I am quite sure,' said Lady Vaux, who did not look very much distressed. 'But we shall know all about it when Mr. Kingsley comes to our aid. Do you expect to see him this morning?

Leola turned her head. 'Yes,' she said,' Mr. Kingsley will be here directly.'

'I am so glad!' exclaimed her ladyship, stroking the fur on her jacket. And may I wait to see him, and hear what he says? You know I so depend

'Certainly, if you will,' said Leola, but with no great cordiality in her voice. She would much have preferred that Lady Vaux should take her departure.

'No more coffee, thank you very much, dear Mrs. Wetherell,' said her ladyship. 'I don't know what they will think at home! I ran away without seeing Philip.'

As she spoke, a servant opened the door and announced Mr. Philip Dyce. "Oh! here he is." 'Von here, Laura!' he said, raising his brows, as he came forward to Leola 'Good-morning, Miss Dale. Quite an invasion. 'Just what I said !' exclaimed Lady Vaux; 'but I have made my excuses now, what are yours, Philip?' 'I came to ask Miss Dale if the would let the twenty-acre field to a very deserving man.

'My dear Philip, that is too transparent!' exclaimed Lady Vanx. Confess, now, that you came with the news of Polly Marsden's elopement, 'Mr. Kingsley has had great experience with horses,' she said, quiet-

'No doubt,' said Philip. Then there was a silence, and she and all felt they were waiting for Cyril's appearance.

Lady Vaux chattered to Mrs. Wetherell, Philip Dyce stood silent beside Leola. Suddenly the door opened, and

Mrs. Tibbett made her appearance. She seemed rather taken aback as the presence of the visitors, and the embarrassment heightened the ex citement under which she was evidently labouring. 'Good--morning, Mrs, Tibbett, palpable discomfiture, 'has anything 'They are all well, miss,' said Mrs. Tibbett, looking round nervously

'But Mr. Cyril, miss.' Leola started, and turned pale. Lady Vaux put up her gold eyeglasses, and stared; Philip Dyce fold-

'Well,' said Leola at last. And her voice sounded strangely forced Leola stood, one hand on the tab'e, her face turned to Mrs. Tibbett. 'Heaven only knows where, sir, nswered Mrs. Tibbett, 'But he's pone-by the train.'

'Gone,' echoed Lady Vaux, in

You Blame theStomach But chronic indigestion will disappear when the liver, kidneys and bow-els are set right by DR. A. W. CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS

You are skeptical.

For you have tried many medicines and still suffer from indigestion with all its annoying symptoms.
Take a new line. Leave the stomach alone, for the source of trouble is in the intestines, and healthful digestion can be restored by the use of Dr. A. W. Chase's Kid-
