THE FISHERY RESOLUTIONS.

Last night the House of Assembly was taken up on a useful debate on the Fishery Resolutions introduced by the Prime Minister. The introducer had already set forth his views and content himself by expressing the hope that party feeling might be kept out of the discussion.

Mr. Hickman took up the discussion and spoke from the standpoint of one who had spent a lifetime in handling fish and whose business brought him into contact with the needs of the markets which Newfoundland fish entices. He strongly advocated the culling of fish by a body which would be independent. He thought the cull should be independent of the Board of Trade and the Marine and Fisheries Department, and believed we had in the police force an independent body of men, fearless in the discharge of their duty, who as exciseman could be easily trained for the work. The standardization of fish for export was a most difficult matter. The standards in the foreign markets were already fixed and fish exporters must either comply with them or take the financial consequences of not doing so. Mr. Hickman's contribution to the debate was most valuable. Mr. Kent spoke in a neat encouraging way of the attempt to grapple with the situation and considered the proposals before the House the most important which could occupy the attention of the members. He thought the Marine and Fisheries Department was not living up to what should be required of it in a country whose staple industry was fish. It should be a Bureau for the collection and dissemination of information connected with the fisheries. Mr. Downey, and Mr Moulton and Mr. Devereux spoke with an extensive practical acquaintance with the problems before the House and contributed valuable suggestions to the debate.
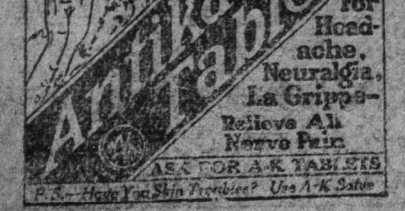

The resolutions passed and a committee was appointed to sit with a committee of the Legislative Council yet to be appointed. The committee consists of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Minister of Finance and Customs, Mr. Kent, Mr. Hickman and the Speaker. It is a matter of regret that one representative of Bona of the F. P. U. did not see their way, owing to the course of events in the House, to serve on the committee. It is also regrettable that the head of the Fisheries Department should have been held up in Burin and away from the House when such important topics were under discussion.

The Lintrose, however, will get away from Port aux Basques to-night. In view of the delay, it is not likely that the hockeyists will arrive here before Tuesday morning or at least Monday night, so that the first hockey match between the City and Visiting teams will come off on Tuesday night at the Prince's Rink.

Superstition.

Last night, to my intense despair, a black dog howled beneath my casement; and at his head I threw a chair, and all the stovewood in the basement. And still he howled to raise the dead, as though his soul were torn by devils.

while I kept throwing at his head old hammers, planes and spirit levels. This is a sign, as all men know, that evil luck is coming, surely, and morning found me full of woe, and sick at heart, and feeling poorly. "When howling bandogs are abroad," I said, "there's dire misfortune due me; all things will travel wapperjawed, and I shall harvest prunes, beshrew me!" Then I went down to get my mail, and found four checks from eastern journals, and also sundry chunks of kale from Matthew George and other colonels. Then dire forebodings flew away like mists before a zipping zephyr, and I sent up a roundelay, and kicked my heels like any heifer. And nearly all our dread and fears of coming evil are as baseless; joy cometh to the man who cheers, whose cheeks are of the briny traceless.
