Old-Time Industries That Are Dying Out.

While science and invention have blotted out many of the old and time-honored industries in the country, some still exist which not only date back centuries, but succeed in holding their own against their modern rivals.

Perhaps the oldest and yet least-known surviving industry is carried on in Brandon in East Anglia. Long years ago the dwellers in the Stone and Neolithic Ages discovered that the ground in this district was full of flints, which they proceeded to unearth and fashion into polished tools and weapons.

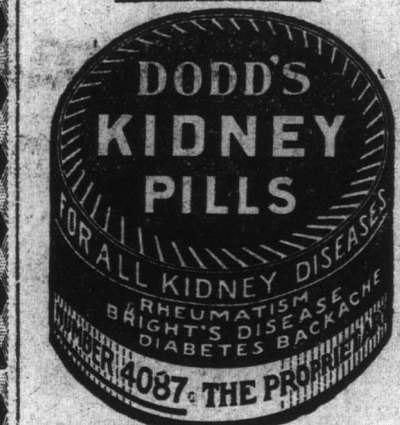

Relics of the Past.
That was at least nine thousand years ago. To-day the industry still flourishes, and it is believed that the Brandon "flint-knappers" are the direct descendants of those old-time workers. In their work they use curiously shaped iron picks, closely resembling reindeer's horns, which, as a matter of fact, were the tools used by the Stone Age workers.

The flint is found in large blocks, which are left to dry and then broken into pieces six inches square. These, in turn, are shaped with hammers, and then trimmed. Few flint-knappers live to be old men, for the particles of the material that are thrown off enter the lungs and bring on consumption.

In the days when the flint-gun flourished, flints fetched fifty shillings per thousand, but now the same number can be bought for about five shillings. Brandon still ships something like three millions of gun-flints annually to Africa, China, and South America, where flint-muskets are still largely in use.

There is another industry which for years has supplied man with one of his luxuries—his clay pipe. Half a century ago, the making of clay pipes was the staple industry of St. Jude's, Bristol, but of the fourteen firms then engaged in the industry in the district, few, if any, have survived, but the work is still carried on in Dundee.

It was from St. Jude's that traders got the pipes which they bartered with the natives of Africa in exchange for ivory, gold, and other treasures. The popularity of the clay was destroyed during the Boer War, when the soldiers got accustomed to cigarettes. Once the industry dies it may never recover, for it calls for great skill and long training.

Made Famous by Friends.

HOW MASTERPIECES OF POETRY WERE INSPIRED.

Four poets of first rank—Milton, Shelley, Tennyson, and Matthew Arnold—immortalized their friends by writing memorial poems about them.

The greatest is the first, "Lycidas," one of the finest poems in any language. Yet it was written about a man otherwise unknown.

Edward King was on his way to Ireland to visit his people when the ship was wrecked and the young traveller was drowned. Milton calls the ship a "perfidious bark, built in th' eclipse, and rigged with curses dark."

Noble Tributes.
John Keats is doubly immortalized. He immortalized himself and was immortalized by Shelley's memorial poem, "Adonais." It is one of the coincidences of literature that these two poets lie in the same cemetery—the English cemetery in Rome. The first went to Italy in search of health and died; the other was yachting off the coast and was drowned.

Had not Tennyson written "In Memoriam," nobody would ever have heard of his friend Henry Arthur Hallam. They were bosom companions, and Hallam was engaged to Tennyson's sister. "In Memoriam" is the most popular memorial poem ever written, and lines from it like "Tis better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all," are known and quoted by everybody.

Arthur Hugh Clough and Matthew Arnold were at "Tom Brown's" school together. Clough was a splendid fellow, and had a great influence on Arnold. He went to live at Florence, where he died at the age of forty. "Thyrsis," Arnold's lament for his dead friend, is a noble tribute.

Another example of a double immortality is Sir David Wilkie. He died and was buried at sea. This incident fired the imagination of Turner, and he painted the masterpiece which hangs in the National Gallery: "Peace: Burial of Sir David Wilkie at Sea."

Laws You Break Every Day.

FUNNY REGULATIONS THAT ARE STILL IN FORCE.

Taking an oath, except before a Commissioner appointed for the purpose, is an offence punished by fine. "A soldier, sailor, or labourer," under the provisions of a very old statute is liable to be fined one shilling for using bad language, but a "gentleman" may be mulcted to the extent of five shillings.

Sunday observance was made compulsory by a law passed in the reign of George III., and no purchases may be made on that day. This law is quite a dead letter nowadays. Look at our Sunday markets, our Sunday barbers, our Sunday concerts and cinemas. In one instance in recent years however, a North of England barber was fined regularly every Monday morning for violating his razor on Sunday.

The woman who wheels a perambulator on the pavement and barks your shins is within the pale of the law, which provides that "no wheeled vehicle is to be allowed on the foot-path."

"All fares, please!" is the cry of the omnibus and tramcar conductor, and yet you cannot be legally compelled, says another old Act, to pay until the completion of your journey.

Again, you can still be compelled to clip trees and hedges which overhang a footpath or roadway. This provision had its origin in the period when footpaths and highwaymen were active, and country roads, and owners of land were required to cut down trees and shrubberies adjacent to their estates which might afford shelters for Dick Turpin and his companions.

Once there was a tax on windows, and there is still an un repealed law against "artificial light."

The rule of the road is a curious thing, and the tramcar driver whistles, hoots, and clangs vehicles off the rails. Yet, if he whistles, the owner of a conveyance may have the wheels of his vehicle fitted with fanges, so that it will travel on the tram lines.

It is generally assumed, by the way, that a person driving along a high road is bound by law to keep to the left, but, in point of fact, he is not obliged to keep to any particular side when the road is clear. He must, however, maintain a sharp look-out, and get out of the way of vehicles which are on the proper side.

A remarkable anomaly is that most railway companies prohibit smoking on their premises, and yet provide smoking carriages for culprits.

The man who plays golf on Sunday instead of going to church is liable, if he is not a Dissenter, to ecclesiastical censure, and though he cannot be fined, ecclesiastical censure would in itself operate as a fine; for he might be "admonished" to go to church or to do penance.

AN ADVERTISING RISK.

The notice, "Trespassers will be prosecuted," is scarcely worth the board on which it is painted. Trespassers will be prosecuted only if they are doing appreciable damage to the land or anything on it, or if the trespass is committed while in pursuit of game. If, in taking a short cut, you are confronted with such a notice, the best thing you can do is to proceed as unostentatiously as possible until the owner or occupier orders you off. So long as the trespasser departs when requested to do so, and has done no damage, he is not likely to hear anything more about the matter.

If a woman has the misfortune to lose her pet dog, and publishes an advertisement offering a reward for its return, she should beware of advertising an inducement to the thief that she might not be able to pay.

Weights We Wear.

An ordinary suit weighs about 6½ lb. By using the thinnest materials, or fannels, it can be brought down to 4½.

At the best, however, a man must carry about 8½—for an ordinary pair of shoes will weigh 2½, and at least another 2½ would be added by all the other articles of dress.

The burden of a countryman's costume soon mounts up. A pair of corduroy trousers alone weighs over 3½.

3½, and hob-nailed boots about 2½ 10oz. each.

That was the weight recorded when a test was made with the costume of a gamekeeper, who, altogether, was carrying garments weighing 16½. 8 oz.

The outfit of the ordinary woman has been estimated at 12½, but even ten years ago a dressmaker boasted that she could dress a customer from hat to shoes at a weight of under 5½.

Back From America! With New York's latest expressions of dressy ideas.

Pick-me-ups from Broadway's crack shops.

A GREAT TRIP! A BIG NECKWEAR MANUFACTURER CLOSES OUT HIS COMPLETE LINE AT A SACRIFICE. NEW GOODS! SPICY, BRISK, SPICK AND SPAN.

Ready for Summer! Ready, aye, ready! No longer need a man look at a dollar with askance. A dollar looks bigger to us than to any store on the street. It was a blue town, but listen! There's nothing like the chink of the good old rhine to make a man think quick. That's what happened when I got over—something like this:

"I want Neckwear, old boy; something good, neat and full-ranged. Want a thousand dozen. I'll buy it all here if you make a price, if not I'm going. What's for this lot?? Quick! make a price."

That's how I bought the Neckwear. Wait, it's not opened yet. It's a big, big surprise.

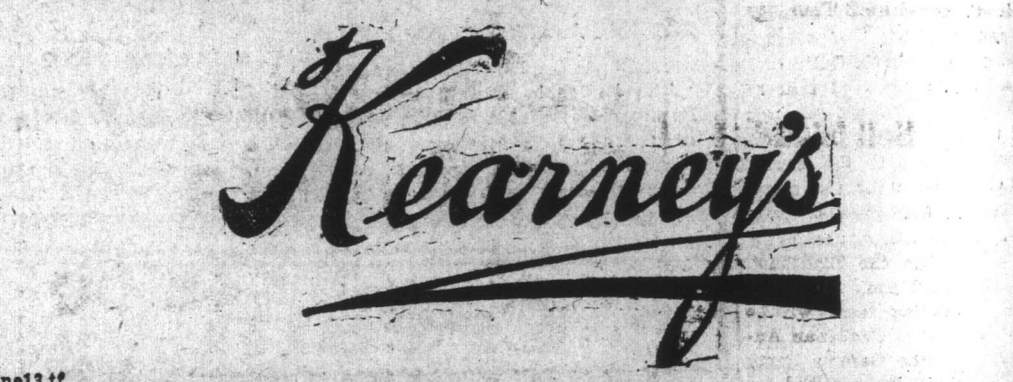

SHIRTS that flow before your eyes in a long vista of exquisite patterns. Tap your chest—here's where your long-suffering pocketbook chortles with joy. You'll want some. There's plenty for all—wait!

COLLARS with many new ideas and some old ones popping up in new garb. The new Semi-Soft Collar that grew famous in the States over night. Here, too! The best of many shapes in stiff and soft from where men wear the latest.

CAPS—a startling new idea. A Cap that will fit any size head. Loosen or tighten the strap—that's comfort. Won't shrink—won't stretch. See them here—they're not elsewhere.

STRAW HATS that grip like velvet. Silks predominate in beautiful Summer Pyjamas, Socks that ease weary feet and charm the eye, Handkerchiefs of exquisitely blended tones. Novel, new and bracing, Summer has given us a bracing impetus to show the latest and best.

Watch for what Kearney shows every day. Kearney's first with the latest and only a step behind Broadway. Good Goods don't come back—"tell me on the floor."

beginning of September—does the "stripping" take place.

"COOKING" THE BARK.

After the tree is gauged to determine the approximate thickness of the cork-wood a circle of horizontal cuts is made at the bottom of the trunk, and again about four feet from the ground.

A series of perpendicular cuts then connect the two. A wedge or lever is now inserted in the cuts and moved gently too and fro, when the bark is stripped off.

Removed to the store yard, the bark is stacked in piles and left until some moisture has evaporated.

The next process is that of "cooking" and scraping. Each section of bark is steamed over a huge boiler. After being made soft and pliable the
