

Canadian Poultry Review.

DEVOTED TO POULTRY AND PET STOCK.

Vol. 5.

STRATHROY, ONTARIO, JUNE, 1882.

No. 6.

BLACK JAVAS,

As bred by J. Y. Bicknell, Buffalo, N. Y.

Artificial Rearing of Domestic Fowls.

BY WILLIAM HENRY THICK, 338 Gloucester St.,
Ottawa, Ont.

No. VIII.

The more you multiply the chickens in the hot-room the more you will be obliged to use attention to keep them clean there in proportion. If you suffered their excrements to increase in the room it would render the air very unwholesome for them, and more capable than the vapors of the dung to hinder the eggs from being warmed with success.

Notwithstanding the many particulars entered into with regard to the different methods by means of which chickens may be reared with success without the assistance of the real mothers, I have hardly given more than the bare hints for those methods, the reader will improve and perfect what I shall have left in embryo. This is a subject which admits of a great variety of contrivances,