THE REAL CLAIMANT OF THE NAME OF THE COUNT DE CHAMBORD.

The present or technical claimant is an officer in the Dutch navy. He serves King William under the name of Emmanuel de Bourbon. One of his brothers, Adelbert, is an officer in the Horse Marines, the Netherlands Chasseurs. The real "Purser," as the Scotch would say, of the heirs of the Comtede Chambord is the eldest daughter of the first claimant. She is known as the Princess Amelia. Her legal name is Mme. de Lepardo, nee de Bourbon, or Naundorf. I have never seen a more unique woman. She is innocent of paint, powder or hair dye, is without any pretense to fashion and owns to 65. Yet it would never occur to any one to call her an old woman. She startlingly resembles both Marie Antoinette and the Duchess d'Angouleme, and has the small blue eyes of the former and the pink cyclids of the latter. This peculiarity is not caused by any disease. Where the Princess Amelia is unlike her alleged "grandmother" and "aunt" is in the extraordinary bulk of her forehead, which is finely developed in all directions. The conver-sational powers of this lady are astonishing. She can talk with fluency, force, propriety and elegance in English, Dutch, French and German. Her manners are easy and affable, and yet there is something in them which enforces deep respect. With strangers she is lively, without being at all frivolous. But when she converses about her family history she does so with a pathos which makes the flesh of the listener creep. One would say that she has an inherited sentiment of all the woes that were experienced by the captives in the temple. I feel with her when she is in a confidential mood as if she were a ghost who was punished for sins that she did not commit. I forget that I am nothing to Heenba, nor Heenba to me. Her father may be an impostor, but she must be in good feith in thinking him the son of Louis MIV. and the martyr of an ironical destiny. The Prinsess Anolia resides on a pretty ground foor near the Arch of Triumph, which a wealthy legitimist lady has placed at her disposal. It is elegantly furnished. The household is composed of three domes-ties, the landkady (v. charating person) and a lady of house to view and a distribution of the land. lady of honor to viscomtesse of old Pettevin family), whose husband was the cuitor of one of the principal Legitimist journeds subventioned by Chambord. There is no royal household in all Europe better style.

Princess Amelia has seen a good deal of ourtly society, and no queen ever understood better how to hold a drawingroom or a petite lerce. In her girlhood, forty-five years ago, she was much noticed and petted by the King and Queen of Saxony, and later by the Netherlands, nee Grand Duchess of Russia. Her courtly air may therefore be imitated, spontaneous though it appears. The company one meets in her drawingroom is, if gauged by the herald's standard, tout ce qu'il y a de olus distingué. I wanted her lady of honor to let me be indiscreet in publishing a list of those who flock around ' the Princess," but as many of them had not yet broken with the Orleans and the other Bourbons, she thought better to decline. The family of the alleged eldest branch, being honorably known in Holland, distinguished old Dutch families came to the Princess Amelia's soirces. They include very orna-mental young ladies, who have fresh skins, eyes showing a Spanish cross, and neat figures. They dance and dress well. Without being flirts they have a simple gaiety that becomes their age. A minister plenipotentiary of ,I must not say what nation, is a cousin of the widowed landlady and brings young secretarics and attaches of legation. Journalism is represented by a very big editor of the De'ats, and by gentlemen belonging to the Figure, Voltaire, Tempand other papers. Editors of defunct Legi timist organs flock in. At the day reception one meets Brittany and Vendean priests, who enter and make their exit timidly. They and the laics of their way of thinking are attract ed to the Princess because of the great difficulties of her case. They have been educated to believe in and hope for miracles. What staggers my faith strengthens theirs. Racine, too, has prepared their minds for a miraculously preserved Dauphin in his tragedy of "Athalie." If the so distant grandson of Louis XVI. had money and energy he might go far into a country in which all is possible. But he and his brother are poor and unenterprising. They may win partisans in royalist chateaus, but cannot hurt the republic .-Paris Letter to London Truth.

THE LATEST DYNAMITE HOAX It was known that a certain smart U. S. young man had studied chemistry for six months; had ordered a sectioned hand-bag and sailed for England. It was subsequently ascertained that he had made several visits to a clock and watch maker before leaving. The cable was used to cause his arrest on arrival, and a trio of metaphysicians were summoned to open the bag, which, in view of probabilities, were regarded as patriotic heroism of the highest order. The official verdict reported 23 samples of Johnston's Fluid Beef, 10,000 circular which were testing the samples of Johnston's Fluid Beef, 10,000 circular which we have the samples of the samples of the samples of Johnston's Fluid Beef, 10,000 circular was the samples of t culars, 4 shirt collars, and a box of tooth-picks .-
