

and sour milk, forms the ordinary food of the peasantry. They are, notwithstanding, better clothed and fed than most of the common people of Europe. The peasants are all free born, and what is remarkable, have no family names. They speak and act in the full spirit of freemen, open, and undaunted, yet never insolent. The Danish is the native language of Norway.

OTAHEITEAN.

The Otaheiteans are inhabitants of the Polynesian or South Sea Islands, in Asia.— It was here, in the island of Owhyee, that the celebrated Capt. Cook lost his life, in a quarrel with the natives. The people are tall, strong, and finely shaped ; hair and eyes
