

see no profit in perpetuating breaches of speech. I endeavour to catch a man's thought, and if called to relate it I do so in the best language I know. Often while writing down the substance of an interview immediately upon having left him, I felt my utter incapacity to describe what had passed between us; I could but wish that many might have been in a position to see and hear without being seen of him. Would to God every child of His were as much under the power of the Holy Ghost as was this wonderful object of His grace.

Praying that the Lord's blessing may accompany the narrative with more and more power, it is again sent forth into the world.
