The Queen's marriage, it is now said, will take place early in February. Among those particularly interested in the event may be mentioned the naval officers. The flag promotions on the occasion, it is said, will include all the captains of 1806-7, making twenty-four additional flags to the active list. Her Majesty is said to keep herself very close during the absence of her intended husband, coafining her exercise to promenading on the Terrace of Windsor Castle. As John Bull delights exceedingly in a topic for newspaper discussion and conversation, the Queen probably finds herself an object of too much notoriety, even for a Queen, at the present moment.

INTERESTING NARRATIVE.—After commenting upon the terrible disaster which befel the Lexington, the editor of the Albany Daily Advertiser relates the following:

INTERESTING MARRATURE. —After commenting upon the terrible disenser which befel the Lexington, the editor of the Albany Daily Advertiser relates the following:

We need not go beyond the limits of our own State for a striking example of how much may be effected in such an emergency by decision and presence of mind on the part of the Captain of the boat. Several years ago a disaster occurred on Lake Champlain, similar in many respects to the burning of the Lexington. One stormy night as the steam-boat Phenix, with a full load of passengers and freight, was ploughing her way through the waters of Champlain, a fire broke out at midnight, and soon raged with irresistible violence. The passengers roused by the alarm from their slumbers, and waking to a terrible sense of impending destruction, rushible violence. The passengers roused by the alarm from their slumbers, and waking to a terrible sense of impending destruction, rushible violence. The passengers stoud by the gangway of his yessel usik a pistol in each hand, determined to prevent any person from jumping into the boats before they were properly lowered in the water, and prepared to receive their living freight. With the utmost coolness and presence of mind he superintended the necessary properations, and in a few minutes the boats were loweredaway and the passengers received safely on board. They then showed off and pulled through the darkness for the distant shore. As soon as this was renched and the passengers landed, the boats returned to the steamboat and took the crew, and, as the Captain supposed, every living soul except himself. But shortly
