Lesson No. 212.
POINTS TO REMEMBER. (TRANSMITTING STATIONS.)
REMEMBER THAT:
The most efficient working wave for a transmitting station is usually about seventy per cent. greater than the fundamental wave length of the antenna system.
A counterpoise is always preferable to other types of grounding arrangements, although frequently the more efficient stations have ground wires connected to all the surrounding pipes, wells, etc.
Always light the filament to normal brilliancy before the plate voltage is connected to the tube circuit, and in shutting down always disconnect the plate potential first.
The antenna ammeter will not read double when two tubes are operated in parallel, although the output may be more than doubled. The output varies as the square of the current.
When operating transmitting tube from a step down transformer, the best place to connect the controlling rheostat is in the primary circuit of the transformer rather than in the filament circuit itself.
The useful life of the tubes is often increased by using alternating current for filament lighting rather than direct current. Tubes last two or three times as long when A. C. is used.
When employing the Hartley transmitting circuit it is desirable to connect the earth connection to the filament terminal of the oscillation transformer, thereby producing more stable operation.
The life of tubes which are continually operated beyond their rated capacity is greatly curtailed and little added range is obtained.
In tuning a tube set a milliammeter should be employed in the plate circuit in order to prevent overloading of the tubes. The normal working plate current of most vacuum tubes is specified by the makers, and the life of the tube is shortened if this is exceeded. An output of seventy watts has been obtained from a five-watt tube in the laboratory, but the tube life was a matter of minutes.
Radiotelephony cannot be conducted on a tube set employing a transformer unless the output of the transformer is rectified before it is applied to the plate circuit of the vacuum tubes.
When employing tube transmitters it is important to have the antenna securely erected so that there is practically no swing to the wires. Slight changes in capacity caused by antenna conductors swaying in the wind results in changing wave length which in some types of circuits is very objectionable at the receiving station.
Glazed porcelain insulators are particularly effective in preventing leakage of the high voltages employed in vacuum tube transmitting sets.

RECENT DEATHS

Miss Sarah A. Burns
The death of Miss Sarah A. Burns occurred on Saturday at the home of her nephew, Herbert N. Hamilton, 178 Wentworth street. She is survived by one sister. The funeral was held this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the residence of her nephew, 178 Wentworth street.

Mrs. Letitia Cunningham
The death of Mrs. Letitia Cunningham, wife of the late Robert Cunningham, occurred at her residence, 64 Adelaide street, at an early hour on Saturday morning, after an illness lasting some weeks, leaving two sons, Fred W. Cunningham and Robert I. Cunningham, both of this city; one daughter, Mrs. R. P. Haslett, Edmonton, Alberta, and one sister, Mrs. S. Dixon, of Massachusetts. Many friends will sympathize with the family in their bereavement. The funeral will take place at 2 o'clock this afternoon from 64 Adelaide street.

Nehemiah Nice
Nehemiah Nice died suddenly about 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon while walking from the dining room to the kitchen in his home at 24 Middle street. Mr. Nice had just finished his dinner and rose from the table to go to the kitchen, when his wife noticed him fall to his knees. She rushed to his aid but found that Mr. Nice had expired. Dr. F. L. Kenney was summoned immediately but nothing could be done, as death had been instantaneous. He had been in poor health for about a week but his condition had not been regarded as serious, and his death came as a great shock to his relatives and friends. Mr. Nice was fifty-one years of age and was employed as a henchman. He leaves his wife, one son, George; two brothers, Frank and Charles; two sisters, Mrs. Jennie Patterson and Mrs. Frederick Cunningham, all of West St. John.

Helen H. Robertson
Many friends of Mr. and Mrs. E. Roy Robertson, 238 Douglas avenue, will sympathize with them in the death of their five-year-old daughter, Helen Hetherington, yesterday at the General Public Hospital. The funeral will be held tomorrow from the home of her parents.

Miss Elizabeth McGrattan
The death of Miss Elizabeth McGrattan of St. George, occurred on Thursday. She leaves her parents, one sister, Mrs. Joseph Murray of St. John, and five brothers.

FUNERALS

The funeral of R. H. Arnold took place Saturday afternoon from Trinity church, where Rev. Canon Armstrong conducted service at 2:30 o'clock. There was a large attendance at the funeral and the Masons were in charge at the grave. Interment was in Fernhill cemetery.
The burial of Francis J. Murphy took place yesterday afternoon. Rev. Mr. Dowling was the officiating clergyman and the funeral was attended by members of the I. O. F. Interment was in Fernhill cemetery.
The funeral of George Jones was conducted yesterday from his former residence, Pond street, to Cedar Hill cemetery. Rev. Mr. McKim attended the funeral.
The burial of William J. Miller took place yesterday afternoon from the Baptist church, where service was conducted by Rev. J. J. McDermott.
The body of John C. Cameron was taken to Sheba on Saturday on the 7:10 o'clock train for interment in the family lot there.

SCRIBES MODEST IN HOCKEY MATCH

A marvellous display of gymnastic was given on Saturday night on the ice of the St. John Arena after the regular skaters had departed to their well-earned rest and the "hockey" teams of the Telegraph-Times and Furness-Spectators, the referee and members of the opposing teams all had different visions. They made it anything from six to one to sixteen to one, but on one point they were positive, it was something to one, for the leader of the Telegraph and Times was the only one who could penetrate the stone wall defense offered by the skippers. After the surprise occasioned by McLeod's flying start had worn off, the newspapers men might better have shot at the Queen Elizabeth than at the Furness-Whiffy goal. Nothing could pass. As for the Telegraph and Times goal, suffice it is to say that the keeper of this was a better dodger than his contemporary at the far end. He was hit only once or twice and then the polite shipping men apologized profusely. When finally the time-keeper, exhausted and almost blind from watching the dizzy spectacle, managed to focus his gaze in his stop-watch, he weakly called for a halt, the skippers of the respective teams called weakly for weak cheers and the players faded away. Yes, like old soldiers, they did not die, but simply faded away.

Who hopes that the big league baseball scouts and the race track cacklers will not want any of these players, we give the list: Goal: T. T. Hansen Clarke
Defence: McLeod
Nichols Cowan
Trompore Forwards: Richard
Scott Walsh
West Walsh
Mensley Walsh
Elwart Martin of Indiantown had the fortitude to endeavor to call the misplays, but his whistle and voice gave out early in the game.

MRS. PANKHURST

(Moncton Times)

Previous to 1914 Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst might fairly enough have been introduced to an American audience as the "English Suffragette Leader," the woman who, when all constitutional means had been denied the suffragettes of Great Britain, had again and again stormed the historic House of Commons at the head of an army of women demanding votes. This description of Mrs. Pankhurst even previous to August, 1914, would have been incomplete, to those who know her best. For many years before the suffragette agitation began Mrs. Pankhurst was a striking figure in the social and political life of her native city of Manchester.

In national politics, Mrs. Pankhurst was well known before she had passed her fine youth, her sympathies with the masses at first leading her to join the Labour Party on the executive board of which she served for several years. In her maturity Mrs. Pankhurst became a member of the Liberal Party, but always a critical member, preaching a practical democracy to which the majority of the voters of her party had never attained.

Emmeline Pankhurst has always been an unusual, a superior woman with a mind and a vision far beyond that of the common man or woman. But when the world war came, when Great Britain, in August 1914, threw in its lot with heroic Belgium and with valiant France, then Emmeline Pankhurst became a truly great woman, one of the leading statesmen of her country and her time.

Mrs. Pankhurst was in France when the war burst upon the world. She was resting there after a stormy period of imprisonment in Holloway jail, having for the twelfth time or more, endured the horrors of hunger and thirst strike against which the British authorities admitted themselves helpless. Yet, with the first gun fire of the war, Mrs. Pankhurst declared a truce all suffrage militancy, left her refuge in France, went back to London and offered her services to the Government. With her daughter Christabel, whose name and activities have with her own long been inseparable, she began to study the vast problems of mobilizing industry in factories and on the soil, in order that the life of England, during the war, should go on with as little suffering as possible.

Great Britain, for all her peerless navy was almost as unprepared for war as the United States. She had a small army, insufficiently officered, a war office entirely surrounded with red tape, and industries controlled by labor unions in which a dangerous pacifist element was apparent. Mrs. Pankhurst and her daughter perceived instantly that if an army was to be raised and maintained an army of women would have to be mobilized in industry. It was the Pankhursts who first persuaded Premier Lloyd George to establish training schools for women in munition works. It was they who first preached the gospel of a woman's land army and encouraged the thousands of "farmettes" who left their homes and made the soil of England produce more than it had before in centuries.

England had its labor troubles during the war, as all the world knows, and up and down the length of England and Wales were Mrs. Pankhurst and her daughter, fighting strikes, pitting their brains and eloquence against the futilities of labor agitators and German agents. How they broke the coal strike in Wales, how they helped to keep the munitions factories going at full speed during four desperate years cannot be told in brief.
And now the world war is over and the German menace is forever dead. At least so the superficially minded reason. Mrs. Pankhurst knows that the war is not over, that democracy is not yet achieved, that the world is not yet safe for women and children and the home.

To miss what Emmeline Pankhurst has to say is to miss hearing one of the great speakers of the time, one of the few real orators living in the world. To call Mrs. Pankhurst an orator is by no means to describe her manner in speaking. She is not grandiloquent. She is gentle, appealing, logical, and beyond words convincing. Hundreds who have gone out of curiosity to hear the "raucous" Mrs. Pankhurst have been won to a life-long allegiance to her, not only as a great speaker, but as a woman, in the truest sense, fascinating and enthralling.
