An Object of Pity

That part of our nature which we call the emotional is much more highly developed in women than in men. They are more sensitive, more tender, more sympathetic, more pronounced in their likes and dislikes, more susceptible to the extremes of pleasure and pain; and these refined mental qualities, no less than beauty of form and feature, make up the atmosphere of attractiveness and charm which always surrounds true womanhood.

The continued existence of these winning, engaging womanly characteristics depends to a very large extent on the regularity of the womanly functions and the condition of the womanly organs which are the glory of a well woman. When these organs become the source of suffering and torture almost insupportable, her cheerfulness is changed to a feeling of despondency, almost of despair, and she is haunted with forebodings of worse evils to come instead of being cheerful, kind, and reasonable, she becomes moody and irritable, being unable to keep her mind from dwelling on her troubles, the cause of her suffering, and the prospect of being neglected or forsaken by her relatives and friends, and she has a most humiliating sense of her own helplessness, and of her own degradation.

What makes the case still more pitiable, especially when married women, is the fact that few men understand or appreciate the extent of their suffering, or the seriousness of the troubles ailing them. Many doctors even speak of these disorders as "a bad cold," or "a nervous headache," and the poor sufferer often gets a reputation for being a "hysterical" or "neurotic" woman.

As these disorders are due to a disordered condition of the womanly organs, it is evident that to effect a cure these organs must be restored to normal condition; or, in other words, the circulation, which has become congested and stagnant in these parts, must be improved so that the waste matter will be expelled, and the nourishment so badly needed be brought to these suffering organs. It is the waste matter, or broken down tissue, which is held in the stagnant blood vessels in these parts, that causes most of the suffering by oppressing the nerves located in these parts.

The remedy known as ORANGE LILLY will positively relieve this congestion and restore normal circulation in the disordered organs. It is an applied or local treatment, and acts wholly on these parts. It is absorbed into the blood vessels in these organs, and as it is a powerful antiseptic, it kills the bacteria which are the cause of the trouble. As this dead matter is discharged, the pain and nervous troubles become less, and the nerves and blood vessels become normal. ORANGE LILLY thus proves its merit by actual results. It acts as a cathartic, and as a purgative, and as a blood purifier.

Dear Mrs. Currah—I am very grateful to ORANGE LILLY for the change it has made in my life. When I commenced its use eight months ago I felt I would be surely insane before the year was ended. The pain I suffered often made me wish for death, and besides I would have such fits of depression and nervous twitching that I would scream. I had doctored with three different doctors for over two years, and had also used both the Pierce and Pinkham medicines, but none of them seemed to reach my case. I felt some improvement after the first month's use of ORANGE LILLY and have kept gaining ever since. I do not feel that I am entirely cured yet, but I am so much better than I was that I am sure I will soon be entirely well. I sleep well, and feel cheerful and happy, except that I am occasionally somewhat depressed, but these spells are getting fewer and milder. I have also noticed improvement in my appearance. Enclosed find $2 for which please send me two boxes of ORANGE LILLY and one of Cerate Massage. I might add that the matter so badly needed be brought to these suffering organs. It is the waste matter, or broken down tissue, which is held in the stagnant blood vessels in these parts, that causes most of the suffering by oppressing the nerves located in these parts.

Free to all Sufferers

In order to enable every woman suffering from any form of female disorders to test the merits of ORANGE LILLY, I will send to everyone who will send me her address, or the address of any suffering friend enough of the remedy for ten days' treatment, absolutely free. As this is worth $2 for which please send me that it must give relief that I make this free trial offer. Further, if any woman wishes expert medical advice, and will write me a full description of her case, I will submit same to the staff of the Connel Medical Institute, Detroit, Mich., and they will write her direct without expense to her. INCLOSE THREE 2-CENT STAMPS and address MRS. FRANCES E. CURRAH, WINDSOR, ONT.

A TRIPLE MURDER RECALLED

Cape Breton Murder Case Brings Back One of 1833

NO EXECUTION SINCE THEN

Mrs. Flahavin and Two Sailors Hanged For Slaying Her Husband—Woman's Daughter Overheard Talk of Crime and Gave Information to Magistrate

(Gloucester Gazette) The verdict of "murder" brought in Wednesday by the jury in the Garrio murder case, is the first of its kind in the Cape Breton criminal courts since 1833. For over seventy-eight years Cape Breton juries refused to condemn any man to the gallows, although there have been cases tried where such a verdict would undoubtedly have been the right one.

The Garrio case which, with the three other murder cases at this term of the supreme court, has caused tremendous excitement all over Cape Breton, recalls the sensational Flahavin murder at North Sydney in the year 1833. In Sydney, Gloucester Bay, North Sydney, Sydney, Maine, and all over Cape Breton, the people, young and old, are discussing the two crimes. On that occasion, two sailors, and Mrs. Flahavin, the wife of the murdered man, were publicly hanged in what is now called Victoria Park, then the Barrack ground in Sydney, for that awful crime.

On September 12 the prisoners received their sentence that they be "taken hence from the court and hanged by the neck until dead." There is no record of the date on which the hanging took place, but it must have been a very short time after the sentence was pronounced.

The details of the murder as learned by a Gazette representative from Mr. McDonald and others, are as follows:—One fine summer morning in July of the year 1833 two sailors from a ship that had been visiting North Sydney called at the Flahavin home, which is situated about three-quarters of a mile from the Belmont Hotel and almost exactly where the residence of A. G. Hamilton is now, and induced Mr. Flahavin to go in the woods near his farm, ostensibly for the purpose of buying some oxen. The sailors had been frequent visitors at the farm and one of them fell in love with Mrs. Flahavin, and the other with one of the daughters. The mother, daughter, and sailors had evidently arranged for the murder of husband and father the night previous and when the sailors arrived early in the morning they were accompanied to the woods by Mrs. Flahavin.

Getting the old man into the woods the three beat his brains out with an axe and club. Flahavin begged hard to be allowed to live, promising to leave the country and never return. A deaf ear was turned to all his pleadings and the three clubbed him to death. The body was then buried beneath an old tree trunk and covered with limbs and boughs.

The sailors and Mrs. Flahavin then returned to the house, and talked over the crime with the eldest daughter. A young daughter who had been hiding in the next room heard their conversation. The two sailors and the two women became alarmed lest the young daughter should hear their story and would betray them, and they decided to kill her if they found she had been awake and heard their conversation.

With great presence of mind the young daughter feigned sleep when she heard them approach, and it was due to her strategy that her life was saved. The murderers fear of betrayal being stilled, they left the room. The young girl then quickly dressed herself and crawled out the window, made for the home of Captain McKinnon, who was a magistrate and lived near Lettice's Creek bridge, some three miles away. Keeping to the woods for two and a half miles for fear of pursuit, the girl at last came out upon a turn in the road and on looking back was horrified to find the two sailors in pursuit. Fear lent her wings, and she broke into a hard run that carried her into the home of Captain McKinnon's a moment or two before her pursuers arrived.

When the sailors saw her enter the house they turned back from the gate and went back to the Flahavin house in which they had buried their victim. Between gasps for breath the young daughter of the murdered man hastily told her awful story of the crime. Magistrate McKinnon, although hardly crediting it, at once issued a warrant and sent three constables to arrest the sailors and Mrs. Flahavin. The law found the bones buried under the old tree trunk.

Suffered With Nerve Trouble For Two Years.

IT WAS IMPOSSIBLE FOR HIM TO SLEEP.

Diseases of the nervous system are very common. All the organs of the body may be diseased while the nervous system alone may be diseased, therefore it is necessary for anyone suffering from any nervous trouble to procure a remedy which will at once quieten the nerves and build up the system.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will do this for you, providing you give them a fair trial.

Mr. Chas. W. Wood, Montreal, Quebec, writes:—"For two years I had suffered with nerve trouble, and was impossible for me to sleep. It did not matter what time I went to bed, in the morning I was even worse than the night before. I consulted a doctor, and he gave me a tonic to take a half hour before going to bed. It was all right for a time, but the old trouble returned with greater force than before. One of the boys, who works with me, gave me half a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I took them and I got such satisfaction that I got another box. After the second box I could sleep soundly from 10 p.m. until 6 a.m., and now feel good."

FRUIT GROWING IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

Spokane, Wash., March 9.—F. A. Huntley, state commissioner of horticulture, says, in a report just submitted to Governor Marion E. Hay, that of 288,786 acres of land devoted to fruit growing in the state of Washington, 238,854 are planted to apple, peach, plum, prune, apricot and cherry trees. Estimating the average annual yield at $8,500,000 for the next five years, he places the average value of land devoted to horticulture at $300 an acre, on an earning basis of 10 per cent, which, growers say, is ultra-conservative.

The acreage devoted to strawberries is 2,532, with 400 acres in cranberries and 2,560 acres in grapes, and 5,200 acres in other berries. More than 10,000,000 of a total of 14,578,182 fruit trees in the state are in eighteen counties east of the Cascade mountains, where intensive methods are practised in the commercial orchards. Spokane county heads the list in apple culture with 1,804,882 trees; Yakima county has 1,883,771, and Chelan county claims 1,821,381. Okanogan county is fourth with 847,535, and Stevens county has 324,676 trees.

THEY WANT OUR HAY

(Hartland Observer) For several weeks there have been representatives of different American firms at various points in Carleton and Victoria counties grading hay for the American market. One of them in answering a query of the Observer said: "Hay fit for our market? Why the country is full of it. All it needs is to be uniform in grade." "Last September the farmers were told by certain politicians that Carleton county hay could not be sold on the American market, so poor was its quality; and that if it could be sold it would be delayed to the old flag to do so. In another part of this paper will be found where a train of eighteen cars of hay left Woodstock for Virginia. The duty on the shipment amounted to $700, and had reciprocity become law the farmers would have got $4 a ton more for it.

"Did you get on your knees when you proposed?" "No, the girl I proposed to was using them!"
