"Married!" gasped Mrs. Adams, in consternation, from the head of the breakfast-table — 'my twenty-year-old Teddy married!"

"Didn't you hear what I read!' demanded her husband, looking up from a letter just received; 'or must I again convey to you the pleasing information that your son Edwin has made a fool of himself? Yes,' continued the head of the family, 'married, and has been for two months; and the first thing he wants is money. Well, as he has made his bed so let him lie upon it. And, although he is kind enough to intimate that it is his own money, loaned to me two years ago, not a cent of it shall he get!"

After which remark the exasper-tod father threw the letter on the table and left the room.

Now, Mrs. Adams, generally speaking, was the mildest little women in the world; but she always had been troubled to a certain extent with the little green eyed monster; and this time she lost her habitual control over her jealousy. 'That young person's interests and comfort appear to be paramount to everything else in your opinion, she flashed. 'But of course, the young lady can come,' she added, seeing the amazed countenance of her husband. 'She west swell and your construction.' 'She most surely can,' remarked Mr Adams, experiencing a thrill of satisfac-tion at his wife's unmistakable exhibi-

A few days after May had taken her place among the family, all Mrs. Adam's jealous fears were quieted.

'I don't know how we would ever get along without you now,' she told May, entirely forgetting her previous doubts. 'You seem to have the knack of soothing everything over. If you were not so quiet I should say you managed us all here. I do wish Teddy had waited until he saw you before marrying; then his father, too, would have

And with a mock, stern command not to worry, handsome, impulsive Teddy Adams started on his long winter trip.

A queer little smile played around the dimpled mouth of Teddy's wife, as reading a morning paper, a day or two afterward, her eyes chanced to light upon the following advertisement:
