BRIDE TORE VEIL.

TRAMPLED BOUQUET.

Ellen Gallen Thought She Had Been Deserted and Fled from Church.

TRENTON, N. J., Sept. 1.—After waiting an hour in vain for her presumed husband to meet her at the Reformed church, where they were to have been married, Miss Ellen Gallen, of this city, threw her bouquet under her feet, tore away her bridal veil and orange blossoms and started for the door of the edifice, intending to hasten home to hide her grief and mortification from a hundred guests who had assembled to see the nuptials.

Her flight was interrupted by the arrival of two excited men, one of whom was Julius Rodolph, of Phoenixville, Pa., the tardy bridegroom. He explained that a belated train had delayed his arrival in the city.

The bride, her attendants and the priests returned to the altar and the ceremony proceeded.

THE MACHINE ENDORSES.

As was expected, the liberal machine majority in parliament has endorsed the G. T. P. policy. As was their duty, the opposition have strenuously fought the passage of a measure which will tend to such a calamitous extent to the injury of the country. But even the most confident conservative had no hope of affecting the government majority in the house by more than two or three votes. When a vote means the loss of position, of influence, of money and of the power of patronage, there are few indeed who have the courage to cast it.

But the efforts of the opposition in fighting a policy prophetic of disaster and bounded on all sides by corruption are not lost. The people have heard and later they will judge and pass sentence. No endorsement by a consciousness, subservient majority in parliament can force upon an awakened Canada a policy which takes the people's money to build a national railway and hands that road, with all its great possibilities, to the control of a corporation which has always been hostile to Canada's interests.

Now that Mr. Blair and other powerful opponents of the G. T. P. bill in and outside of the house have failed to capture any support from the members of the liberal machine in parliament, it will be interesting to watch the eagerness with which the few, in whose consciences at first arose a protest against the Cox inquiry, will clamor back to the fold where the fodder is. The Telegraph is already safe inside. Its reversal of policy—as the Star some time ago predicted—has been expeditious rather than dignified. Feeling a week or so ago that its faith in Mr. Blair's strength had been misplaced, it showed signs of sorrow for calling nasty names at Laurier and Fielding and all others who dared to oppose the ex-minister. Since then it has been only waiting for a good excuse to flip again.

Today, as if the vote in the house were a surprise to its managers, it loftily refers to the superiority of the great liberal party to any one man, and pledges its hearty support to a policy upon which all its adjectives of condemnation have been lavished. The Telegraph's reason for its support of this measure and its opposition to Mr. Borden's alternative plan, is candidly stated; one policy is liberal and one is conservative; which, being interpreted, means that it would be difficult to run the Telegraph without government pay.

A COUNTRY WORTH WORKING FOR.

"A country worth working for"—says Lord Strathcona, speaking of Canada, for which he has worked a large part of his eighty odd years.

"Sweet and fitting it is," said the Roman poet, "to die for one's country," and that thought has sent men, cheering, into the face of death through all the years and has the same power still to send them.

But this is a practical age and though, when needs arise, anything high which ever has been done can be repeated, yet the commonplace, common-sense twentieth century man is apt to consider that one good live citizen with the capacity for work in him is worth several dead ones, no matter how well they died. It is not so poetic to work for one's country as to die for it, but under present prosaic conditions, it is a vast deal more useful.

And that is what Canada needs, live men, working men, men with the power to see and the power to do. We want our poets and our artists and our great literary men later on but just now we want workers. We have just started, just barely entered upon our life as a nation. We have wealth untold in land and lake and mountain and in the waters of the sea around it all. In beauty, in climate, in resources of every kind we have a country like none other, a country well worth working for. May we be sent more men and better men to work for it.

A BOOM FOR LYNCHING.

The lawyer defending ex-Secretary of State Caleb Powers, who was recently sentenced to death for complicity in the assassination of Governor Goebel, of Kentucky, in 1900, is petitioning for a new trial. He will probably get it. Already the case has dragged on over three years and nobody believes that the powerful criminal, to secure whose conviction troops had to be called out to protect judges, jurymen and lawyers from murder, will ever suffer the just penalty for his crime.

With the delays and evasions that of late years have become characteristic of criminal jurisprudence in the United States, no wonder the people are losing faith in the courts, the last bulwark against anarchy. That faith once entirely lost, the maintenance of law and order is impossible and unless some radical reform in criminal procedure is soon made those who seek justice will take matters more and more into their own hands until the present alarming

LOCAL NEWS.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN EXPOSURE.

The report of the commission appointed to investigate the British management of the South African war, with the appalling exposure of governmental ignorance, incompetency and grave neglect of important details, makes public no more than has been generally known, or at least suspected. The British army system, root and branch is bad. Rather than a fighting machine the army is a social institution. It has always been so. Not a war in the past century but has been followed by exposures of similar evils from the same cause. With the weapon of England's greatness in the hands of trivial social cliques what can be expected? The only way to put things right is to place a man in charge and let him alone. Lord Roberts, the present commander-in-chief, like all his predecessors, is tied hand and foot by red tape, and in no position to cope with the myriad influences which tend to hamper his usefulness.

There was a man named Kitchener who was given a free hand in Egypt some time ago and who, out of an aggregation of cowards and incapables made a fighting machine of terrible strength. If he were called from India and put at the head of the British army with leave to exercise his will, six months or less would see the retired list of officers increased ten fold, the places filled with men whose only qualification was ability and the whole service from the war office down on the way to such efficiency as the country needs.

The English are a long-suffering race but it is nearly time for a protest from the classes who fill the casualty lists against the use of their good blood as dye for ribbons.

The aldermen have ousted their consciences for the present by engaging a man at a cost of $300 to prepare a model for the new ferry boat. When the model is prepared they will have more splendid argumentative opportunities in discussing changes to every detail of the plan submitted and in disputing about the building of the boat. But if they have not something definite done before next civic election something will be heard to drop.

Blair said the reason for the government's haste with the G. T. P. bill was because Senator Cox couldn't wait. Tarte in his recent speech said that this was probably correct. Both these men have been on the inside and know what the workings of the machine. Their words carry weight.

How long will the life and property of residents of St. John be left at the mercy of a totally inadequate fire alarm system which is every day growing more unreliable. For penny wise pound foolish procrastination the common council of this city challenges comparison.

Alfred Austin has written a poem about Lord Salisbury. With all due deference to the dead statesman, it serves him right. He made the man poet laureate.

Wonder who's a good enough liberal for Laurier now?

THE SEPTEMBER READER.

Humorous articles and poems are a prominent feature of the September issue of The Reader. Bert Leaton Taylor heads the list with his monthly stalwart of Reading Sauce, which is followed by a cartoon by McCutcheon, an amusing contribution by Carolyn Wells and verses by William J. Lampson. To turn to more serious matters, The Gentle Side of Mr. Whistler is sympathetically portrayed in an article by a former pupil. Several characteristic stories are told, but a new and gentler light is thrown upon his character. This article will be invaluable to future biographers of the master, and is accompanied by several interesting illustrations. Bad Portraits by a Great Painter, a strenuous discussion of Mr. Sargent's work by Alfred Brennan, is another article in this number which will command the attention of those interested in art. Misinterpreting the West, The Woman of Thirty, and Walter Pater are the titles of other interesting articles in this number. There are poems by Arthur Stringer, Edward Fawcett, Florence Earle Coates, Josephine Preston Peabody and others, while The Fortunes of Fifi, Reminiscences of an Interviewer and Countries I Have Never Seen are continued in this issue.
