

WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT VANCOUVER BRITISH COLUMBIA

William E. Curtis, in Chicago "Record-Herald"—

VANCOUVER, "the Liverpool of the Pacific," is a solid, well-built town, much superior in architectural display, and in appearance generally, to any of the new cities on the American side that I have seen. There is nothing shabby about it; the streets are well paved and well kept. Everything seems to wear an appearance of prosperity and permanence, and nothing is out of repair. There are no empty store-rooms or vacant houses, and wherever you go, buildings for business and residence purposes are under construction. The sawmills and salmon canneries are well-built structures with a permanent look about them. The docks are solid and are kept in excellent order. Vancouver is altogether one of the most attractive and prosperous looking towns I have seen in the West.

J. J. Hill, in a Public Address—

VANCOUVER has not yet started on its forward career. I see a day coming when half a score of lines from Northern British Columbia will converge on Burrard Inlet. You have untold wealth in the seas, the greatest timber resources on the continent and mineral assets that will make British Columbia the greatest province in the Dominion.

James J. Hill, Student of Cities—

No growth and commercial activity, Vancouver has no equal on the Pacific Coast today.
