

DECEMBER MORNINGS

A crimson streak on the pallid sky,
And mists that waver and faint,
A wandering breeze that flutters by
Like stifled voice of complaint.

So come the cold December mornings,
Each more tardy than the last,
And only the note of the jay rings
Like a challenge from the past.