Monks in Robes and Sandals Fined in Police Court.

ALMOST A RIOT IN PARIS

Paris, May 11.—The prosecution of seventeen monks belonging to the Capuchin Monastery here led to a noisy manifestation in the Correctional Police Court to-day, when the monks were charged under the Associations Law with refusing to disperse after their demand for authorization had been rejected by the Chamber of Deputies. The demon-stration over-lowed into the street and caused a brief sensation. The monks filed into court in a pictaresque procession, wearing the brown robes of their order, and sandals on their feet. They were accompanied by a white-robed missionary, who is the founder of the Leper Home in Abyssinia, and who was staying at the monastery.

In replying to the charge, the Father Superior read a long defence, denying that the monks had broken the law, but admitting that the Caputhe law, but admitting that the Capuchins had not separated. He declared that they would never separate, whereupon the crowd filling the court-room loudly applauded. The magistrates fined the defendants 25 frames (85) each, except the missionary, who was discharged.

The sentence was received with shouts of "Long live the Capuchins" and "Long live liberty." The crowd-followed the monks into the street, after they and pald their fines, cherring and throwing flowers. The police,
