entertain a suspicion of its value. There was only one odd thing about the letter from Morpeth, and that was to London at five in the afternoon, but not commented on until after my adventure. It mentioned day and date and hour when my arrival would be expected, and I left London to hit the expected, and I left London to hit the exact time. Had this matter been brought up beforehand we would have said the gentleman was probably going to leave home later in the day. It was to leave home later in the day. It was in the month of October, and I was timed to reach that town at 10 o'clock in the forenoon. The letter said that a carriage would be in waiting for me to drive at once to the manor. The train was on time to a minute and I got off in company with two travelling salesmen.
