We can only express our fervent hopes that such an event may be at hand; but in our ignorance of the real strength of the enemy, and after the experience we have had of war's contingencies, it is impossible to venture anything like precise speculation."

The Duke of Cambridge has quitted Malta. His health is still bad.

The Emperor of the French decorated on Sunday several saphis who had captured flags and otherwise distinguished themselves in the late expedition against Touggourt.

It would hardly do for any one to have the temerity now-a-days to question the excellence of Dr. Hooftand's German Bitters, which are prepared by Dr. C. M. Jackson. In cases of dyspepsia, liver complaint, and derangement of the digestive organs, their many virtues have long since been made plainly apparent. They purge from the system the morbid humors which retard the natural functions, and bring paleness to the cheek, and suffering to the brow. They banish those clouds upon happiness, and restore the system to high health. See advertisement.

HASZARD'S GAZETTE.

Wednesday, February 28, 1855.

The accounts of the war brought by the Mail are any thing but satisfactory. It has at last, become quite evident, that there has been great mismanagement somewhere, but the difficulty is, upon whom to fix it. Upon Mr. Roebuck's resolution: "That a select committee be appointed to enquire into the condition of our army before Sebastopol, and into the conduct of those departments of the Government, whose duty it has been to minister to the wants of the army." Mr. S. Herbert entered into a long and eloquent vindication of the Government, the gist of which, however, seems to be, that the long interval of peace the nation has enjoyed, has had the effect of rendering it more unprepared for war, than it otherwise would, or than it ought to have been. That though we have a collection of Regiments in the highest state of Regimental discipline, we have no army. That these Regiments have been scattered about in various garrisons and Colonies, and have never been exercised in sufficient masses, so as to enable them to act in concert with the same effect as Continental armies, which are kept for a considerable portion of the year, in camp, perfecting themselves in all those various evolutions which may be expected to become necessary in a state of actual warfare. That the Baggage and Wagon Train, which had been brought to some degree of perfection in the peninsular war, had been suffered, from motives of economy, to be entirely destroyed. One of his points of defence is an extraordinary one; he contends that England has never entered into any war, in which she has not encountered in the beginning, a succession of misfortunes, similar to those under which our gallant soldiers are now suffering in the Crimea, and he quotes a despatch from Lord Wellington in 1809, which, with a very few minor alterations, might have been copied by Lord Raglan as descriptive of the state of affairs of the expedition under his command. He is answered however, by Mr. Layard, and most pertinently: "—but surely, if a great minister undertook a great war," says Mr. Layard, "the first thing he should do, would be to refer to history to see how that war should be carried on, and to see what mistakes had been committed, in order, if possible, to avoid them." Lord John Russell, in his speech upon his resignation, admits that the accounts which weekly arrive from Sebastopol, "are not only painful, but horrible and heart-rending," and what is still more extraordinary, that with all the official knowledge to which he has had access, "the state of the army is to him inexplicable." Lord John Russell's resignation at the peculiar moment, is looked upon by all sides, as any thing but creditable to him. To back out on the eve of a battle, because he was afraid of the consequences, and to desert his quondam allies at the moment of their utmost need, was not the most chivalric act, nor has he sufficiently justified it, as a statesman-like one. It would seem that Lord John had proposed to Lord Aberdeen that the offices of Secretary of State for the war department, and Secretary at War ought to be held by the same person, who should be a Cabinet Minister, and in the House of Commons. In this, Lord Aberdeen differed from him, but Lord John Russell did not press it, though if he conscientiously thought the change was necessary to carrying on the war with vigour and effect, he ought to have done so; nor did he make it a condition of his remaining in the Ministry, which Lord Palmerston—who was to have benefited by the proposed arrangement—states, should have been his course. In fact, Lord John should have either resigned some weeks previous, or should have borne the brunt of Mr. Roebuck's attack, in common with his colleagues. Col. Sibthorp's quotation, that "conscience makes cowards of us all," was not inappropriate. There seems to be a general conviction, that Lord Palmerston ought to have the entire direction of the war department.

THE COLONIAL MAILS arrived last night. We have news from England, via New York and St. John, N. B. of the formation of a new ministry.

We Published a double sheet last week on the arrival of the British Mail. In order to put our readers in possession of the news at the earliest period—where practicable—we issued it in two parts,—one of which was delivered on Saturday morning and the other on Monday. We again issue a double sheet, with a continuation of the news, our readers will find that they will be much benefited by the change in our size.

TEMPERANCE.

On Thursday evening last the fourth of the series of Temperance meetings was held in the Hall, J. T. Pidwell, Esq., G. W. P. in the Chair.

The Rev. John McMurray, delivered to a crowded and attentive audience, a highly intellectual and interesting address. We shall refrain for the present from making any special remarks on it, as by a resolution passed at the meeting, the Rev. Gentleman was requested to furnish a synopsis of the lecture for publication, to which request he very kindly consented, we therefore trust that at an early day to present it to our readers.

Mr. Harris gave a short address much to the point, which could not fail of leaving a good impression.

That old veteran in the Temperance cause Mr. John Boyer, being requested by the Chair to make a few remarks, came forward, and in a style peculiarly his own, declared his warm attachment to the cause, and though fast verging to the grave, was disposed to go all the length that the most ardent advocate contended for, and urged the people to rest not short of a Prohibitory Law.

The singing on the occasion was remarkably good. The young Ladies and Gentlemen who have so kindly volunteered their services to sing at these meetings deserve all praise, but we are sure that any compliments from us are quite superfluous, as the satisfaction they feel that in any way advancing so great and glorious a cause gives its own reward.

The instrumental music too was very good and all go to show that the Temperance cause has a firm hold on the affections of the community.—Com.

MECHANICS INSTITUTE.—John M. Stark Esquire, the Inspector of Schools for this Island, last evening, delivered an instructive lecture, upon "EDUCATION." He entered upon the principles of his important subject, with much minuteness; discussed the system that had prevailed in Greece and China; and then shewed what Education really was, in its moral, intellectual and physical tendencies. He also described the working and training of the Normal School system, and concluded, by suggesting certain improvements, necessary, to make the Free School system now in successful operation in this Island, the best in the world.

William Cooper Esq. M. P. moved that Mr. Stark be requested to place his lecture into the hands of the Committee of the Institute for the purpose of having it published for general information.

The motion was seconded by the Hon. the Col. Secretary. His Honor the President deservedly complimented Mr. Coles, as being the originator, and as having the energy and indomitable perseverance to carry the Free School system into successful operation in this native Isle.

The motion was unanimously passed. A lively debate then ensued.

His Excellency the Lieut. Governor honored the Institute with his presence; and a number of both Houses of the Legislature were in attendance.

Dr. Johnson will (D. V.) Lecture next Tuesday evening, upon "Corporate Bodies, having relation especially to Sanitary Measures."

N. B. The Librarian will be in attendance in one of the Rooms of the lower story of the Temperance Hall, one hour, before each lecture, to deliver Books to the Members of the Institute; commencing on Tuesday evening next at seven o'clock.

Donations in Books, apparatus or curiosities towards the Museum will be thankfully received.—Com.
