This is strange, for through being a member so long, Mr. Pickard ought to know better. For our part we always make a point of trying to imitate those who act more properly than we do ourselves. Mr. Pickard, in a very savage and ungentlemanly way, referred to an article in the Star lately; with the express purpose of making capital out of it. It was perhaps fortunate for the Star that Mr. perhaps fortunate for the STAR that Mr. Pickard is such a wretched speaker, and that a tenth of those at the table did not hear a word of what he said, and that a twentieth did not understand a word of what they did hear. The STAR is Conservative, but Mr. Pickard is a Critic and they did hear a word at the table also showed large bodies of men, and for some time it was not certain that they did not mean to make a serious attack from the south and west also is a Grit; and then York in miniature attack from the south and west also. was there. Hence Mr. Pickard thought the time a fitting one; but the cries of "Oh, Oh!
