Within another year the problem of ransportation will for western Canada have been to some extent solved with the more satisfaction than at present. The old cry for cars for shipping out the grain, of the wheat blockade, of the too garly close of navigation and of cars stalled at wayside points, will have largely disappeared unless the two distributions of the means of shipping it is not sufficient to carry it is not sufficient to carry it is not sufficient to carry it may well happen in the order of things that this will be the case but with the new means of outlet will come the greater facility in redoubling them.

in Westminster Block

The Morning Albertan is at home in its new offices in the Westminster Block. The Westminster Block is at the corner of Tenth Avenue and First Street East, just through the subway from the old Albertan office. The editorial, business, circulation, advertising and job printing, offices are located here and all are beginning to feel at home. The plumbers, carpenters, gas fitters ,electric workers, telephone operators, furniture polishers and many other artisans and machinists are busy at work all day and give the place the busiest kind of an appearance. The Albertan machinists are beating all existing records. With new machinery which has already been secured and rebuilt machinery, recovered from the fire, they expect to take a long step forward in newspaper production early next week. The offices will then be in better shape and the place will be more like home. However the Albertan is always pleased to see its friends and in a few days will have something to show them in the way of a modern, up-to-date, commodious and convenient newspaper building. The Westminster Block is probably the most up-to-date office building n the city. It would be worth while for any person to look it over.
