The Lessons Drawn Lions' Der

of Waco, Tokas—"Have LDe-cision of Character."

WACO, Tex., Aug. 31.—9. Talmage to-day delivered the following discourse on the text: "Then the king set him into the state of the prought Daniel and get him into the den of lons." Daniel was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so much a favorite side him that he was so described him that he were a supposite side him to a demagogue saked the king to make a decree that sybody that made a petition to any one stop the king within 30 days should be put to death. King Darius, not suspecting any foul play, makes that decree. The damagogues have accomplished all they wast, because they know that no one can keep Daniel from sonding petitions before God for 30 days. So far from being afraid, Daniel goes on with his rupplications three times a day, and is found on his houselop making prayer. He is caught in the sci. He is condemned to be devoured by the lions. Rough executioners of the law seize him and hasten him to the cavern. But what a strange welcome Daniel receives from these hungry monsters. They faw around him, they lick his hand, they bury his feet in their long mane. That night he has calm sleep with his head pillowed on the warm necks of the tamed tions.

But not so well does Darius the king sleep. He laves Daniel, and hates this mane. That night he has calm sleep with his head pillowed on the warm necks of the tamed tions.

But not so well does Darius the king sleep. He loves Daniel, and hates this stratagem by which he has been condemned. All night long the king walks the floor. He cannot sleep. Darius goes to the den of lions; he looks in. All is silent. His heart stops. He feels that the very worst has happened; but gathering all his strength he shouts through the rifts of the rock, "O Daniel! is the God whom thou servest continually able to deliver thee?" There comes rolling up from the deep darkness a voice which says: "O king! I live forever. My God has sent his angel to shut thelions' mouths that they have not hurt me. Then Daniel is brought out from the den. The demagogues are hurled into it, and no sooner have they struck the bottom of the den than their flesh was rent. While God will defend his people, the way of the ungodly shall perish.

Learn first from this subject that the greatest crime that you can commit in the eyes of many is the crime of success. What had Daniel done that he should be flung to the lions? He got to be Prime Minister. They could not forgive him for that; and behold in that a touch of unsanctified human nature as seen in all ages of the world. So long as you are pinched in poverty there are people who will say, 'Poor man, I am sorry for him; he ought to succeed, poor man!'

world. So long as you are pinched in poverty there are people who will say, "Poor man, I am sorry for him; he ought to succeed, poor man!",

But after a while the tide turns in your favor. Those men who used to sympathize with you stand along the street, and they scowl at you from under the rims of their hats. Just as soon as in any respect you rise above your fellows, if you are more virtuous, if you are more wise, if you are more influential, you cast a shadow on the prospects of others. Young merchants, young lawyers, young dectors, young farmers, at certain times there were those to sympathize with you, but now that you are becoming master of your particular occupation or profession, how is it now, young lawyers, young doctors, young artists, young farmers—how is it now? The greatest crime that you can commit is the crime of success.

Again: My subject impresses me with the value of decision of character in any department. Daniel knew that if he continued his adherence to the religion of the Lord he would be hurried to the lions, but having set his compass well he sailed right on. For the lack of that element of decision of character in any always men are ruined for this world and ruined for the world to come. A great many at 40 years of age are not settled in any respect, because they have not been able to make up their mind. Perhaps they will go south; perhaps they make that inestment in real estate or in railroads; perhaps they will go north; perhaps they will go south; perhaps they make that inestment in real estate or in railroads; perhaps they will not. They are like a man who starts to build a house in the Corinthian style and changes it to Doric, and then completes it in the Ionic, and is cursed by all styles of architecture.

Young man, start right and keep on. Have decision of character. Their old aswill go west; perhaps they will go easily perhaps they will go south; perhaps they will a house that they will go south; perhaps they will a house that they will go south; perhaps they will a house that they will go south; perhaps they will a house the they will go south; perhaps they will a house the they will go south; perhaps they will a house the they will go south; perhaps they will a house they will go south; perhaps they will go south; per shelf.

They think religion is impertinent. They would like to have it very well seated beside them in church on the Sabbath, to find the place in the psalm book, or to nudge them awake when they get sleepy under the didactic discourse. But to have religion go right along by them all through life. They think that is an impertinent religion. They would like to have a religion to help them when they are sick, and when the shadow of death comes over them they would like to have religion as a sort on ight-key with which to open the door of heaven; but reliviou under other circumstances they take to be an impertinence. Now, my friends, religion never robbed a man of a dollar. Other things being equal, a mason will build a better wall, a cabinet-maker will make a better pipe, a lawyer will make a better pipe, a lawyer will make a better pipe, a lawyer will make a better pipe, a merchant will sell a better will sell a better with the sell of the s maker will make a better chair, a plumber will make a better pipe, a lawyer will make a better pipe, a lawyer will make a better plea, a merchant will sell a better bill of goods. Of course, when religion gives a man a new heart it does not propose to give him a new heard, or to intellectualize him; but the more letters you have to write, the more burdens you have to write, the more burdens you have to carry-the more miles you have to travel, the more burdens you have to life, the more orgage ments you have to meet, the more opportunity you have to being a Christian.

Again: I learn from this subject that man may take religion into his politica. Daniel had all the affairs of state on hand, yet a Christian. He could no have been this clovated position up to have keep thorough politician; and yet all the thrust of officials and had agare off diagrace did, not make any leid one to take the ling-to-oned religious principle. He stood before that age, he stands before at larges, a specimen of a Christian politician. It is abourd to expect that men who have been immersed in dome to reformation; and our hope is in the young men who are coming up, that they are battotio principle and Christian principle side by side when they come to the ballot-box and cast their first vote.

Daniel stood on a most unpopular platform. He stood firmly, though the demangegues of the day bissed at bim and tried to overthrow bim. We must carry our religion into our politics. But there are agreet many mational politics who do not see the importance of taking it into city politics; as though a man were intelligent, and the open and the commonst however or right for base political purposes to as sail his private moral character.
