'Are you through with India?" she ask-

"Resigned," said he succinctly.
"Truly?"
He flushed and muttered an oath. She understood. He had been "kicked out."
"Hello!" called out a sprightly voice from the gathering darkness, and the next moment Leslie joined them. "Have dingress tonight Hetty? Just the er with us tonight, Hetty? Just the iree of us. Please do."
"No, thank you, Mr. Wrandall. I am getting ready to leave tomorrow. Packing and all that sort of thing."

Mother and Viv are to get the boat at Southampton. I thought you'd be interested to know what's just turned up "What has happened?" she cried quickly.

Leslie hesitated. A curious gleam stole into his eyes. Was it of triumph?

"Father's got rather old-fashioned ideas about certain things," he observed, by way of preface. "He writes that Sara is way of preface. "He writes that Sara is contemplating a second venture into the state of wedded bliss."

Hetty stared at him. "I—I don't believe it," she said flatly. "How can it be possible? She sees no one."

He laughed. "You're wrong there," said he mendaciously. "She's been seeing a great deal of a certain mutual friend of ours—all summer long."

"You mean?"

"Brandon Booth. Father says that

"Brandon Booth. Father says that rumor has it they are to be married after the holidays. I fancy he needed consola-tion after what happened to him earlier in the year. He was pretty hard bit, believe me." After a moment, he went on boldly: "I ought to be in a position to sympathize with him, I suppose, but I don't. It isn't in me to—" don't. It isn't in me to—
"You say they are to be married?"
cried Hetty, dazed and bewildered.
They had fallen behind Colonel Castleton, who walked on stiffly ahead of them. Leslie treated her to his most engaging

"Looks very Goochy, doesn't it? I'm coming to believe more than ever that blood will tell. Sara knew what she was doing when she cleared her decks for action a few months ago. 'Gad, I understand now why she was so eager to bring off the—well, another match we know bout. Pretty canny, eh?"
"It is incredible," said she, with un-

"Not in the least. Clever person, Sara is. Sets her heart on a thing, and—woof! she gets it, whether or no. Now, don't misunderstand me. I'm fond of Brandon Booth. We all are. We don't object to him as a sort of family attachment. But if she's going to marry him, we want to know where we stand in a business way. You see, he will not only step into my brother Chal's shoes at home, but at the office. And, heaven knows, Brandy is not a good business man. He's great on portraits, but—I beg pardon!"
"I must leave you here, Mr. Wrandall.

"Oh, I say, can't we see something "I am afraid not." He kept pace with her through the half.
"I suppose your father told you that -I haven't altogether given up hope of "He spoke of going to America with you, if that's what you mean," she said coldly, and left him at the foot of the taircase Leslie's hand trembled as it went up to his moustache. "I can't understand her beastly obstinacy," he said to himself.

It was in this spirit of confidence that he prepared to confront her on his arrival in New York, and it was the same unbounded faith in the belief that nothing evil could result from a perfectly just and honorable motive that gave him the need-

He stayed over night in New York, and the next morning saw him on his way to Southlook. There was something truly ingenuous in his desire to get to the botcourage tom of the matter without fear or apprehension. At the very worst, he maintained, there could be nothing more repre-hensible than a passing infatuation, long since dispelled, or perhaps a mildly sinister episode in which virtue had riumphant and vice defeated, with unpleasant results to at least one pe and that person the husband of

"And since then you've had no bad luck?" said Booth, with a smile.

"Plinty of it, begob, but I've had semeone besides meseif to blame for it. There's a lot in that, Mr. Brandon. Whin a man marries, he simply divides his luck into two parts, good and bad, and if he's like most men he puts the bulk av the bad luck on his wife, and kapes to himself all he can av the good for a rainy day. That's what makes him a strong man and able to meet trouble when it comes. The beauty of the arrangement is that bad luck is only timporary, and a woman enjoys talking about it, while good luck is wid us nine-tenths of the time, whether we knew it or not, and we don't have to talk about it."
