exception, and obtained leave to recall Mr. Emden on this point. The witness said he thought that about 75 per cent of the land could be used for agricultural purposes, and Mr. Bodwell was inable to shake him in this statem evidence by once more eliciting the fact that the witness was defendant in one of the numerous similar cases which are pending.

Joseph Hunter, Rais, was recalled by the plaintiffs to contradict the above evidence. Mr. Hunter stated that when he visited the property, coal mainting was recommended. mining was going on at full blast and coal was being shipped. He described his visit to the land and how he ran the lines, and said that he was confident that not more than 15 per cent of the land, or some 22 acres, could be profitably farmed or could be classed as first class land under the government classification. Under cross-examination he admitted that it was a matter of opinion, and he was not prepared to say that some of the rest of the land might not be used for grazing purposes.

On Mr. Bodwell renewing his argument and asserting that everything went to show that it was the coal that was the coal that the described his visit to the land and how he ran the lines, and said that he was confident that not more than 15 per cent of the land or some 22 acres, could be profitably farmed or could be classed as first class land under the government classification. Under cross-examination he admitted that it was a matter of opinion, and he was not prepared to say that some of the rest of the land might not be used for grazing purposes.

On Mr. Bodwell renewing his argument and asserting that everything went to show that it was the coal that the control of the described and such as the provincial revenue would suffer. On the other hand any material reduction of the fees would undoubtedly likewise result in a shrinkage of revenue.

A glance at the revenue returns of the past year shows that the owners of special licenses are bearing very much the largest share of the Provincial taxation. They will not complain if in return they get a title to their licenses where below a set standard. Thus the provincial revenue would suffer. On the other hand any material reduction of the fees would undoubtedly likewise result in a shrinkage of revenue.

A glance at the revenue returns of the past year shows that the owners of special licenses in perpetuity so long as they observed the conditions of the continuous of the continuous continuous properties. It is true that in most cases there when the largest share of the Provincial nining was going on at full blast an

Some further discussion arose with the duction in the exercise of his discretion the risk of loss by fire and provided and the will probably hold an inquest today, Peterson had often complained of a duction of revenue and not the consequence of the body stant it is as high as the average limit can bear. It is to be remembered that the object of this tax is the provided and the will probably hold duction of revenue and not the conservation of the forest. It is also patent that the province in the patent that the province in the servation of its early development needs and must have a large and certain revenue. This reduced the petition to two points:

1. That special timber licenses be made renewable at the expiration of the present renewal period of twenty-one years for a further period of twenty-one years for a further period of twenty-one years.

2. That the present rate of annual rental for special timber licenses be declared to be statutory for the present renewal term of twenty-one years.

The renewal term of twenty-one years term of twenty-one was term of twenty-one years for a further period of twenty-one years.

Inasmuch as it has been said in some quarters that owners of special timber licenses be declared to be statutory for the present renewal term of twenty-one years.

The renewal term of twenty-one have any ownership rights in the licensed and selected dands can ad alogs cut on licensed lands can acting such legislation would be a good place to keep away from. "I am very glad to see that the tim-ber owners of Victoria are alive to their interests in this matter. I may say that very encouraging reports are at hand from all quarters and that in a few weeks the British Columbia Timber and Forestry Chamber of Commerce will be truly provincial in character and influence by the organization of branch chambers through the character and influence by it was also shown that the company had spent $4,000 in constructing a flume intended to carry the logs cut on these three sections and another and had been merely waiting for the survey to apply for the licenses and complete the work.

The lands and works department, however, apparently thought the number of times the ground was restaked suspicious, and refused to issue the licenses but instead invited the company and Blygh to tender for the licenses but instead invited the company and Blygh to tender for the licenses. a 'bonus' paid to a previous holder of a special license, which license is made transferable by the laws of the land, is not as good an evidence of an equity in the timber as if it were paid to the government on the acquisition of the license in the first place.

"I submit that the view that the licensee has an equity in his timber as distinguished from merely owning an option, is correct both as a mat-ter of justtice and of law. If, how-ever, there should be doubt on this latter point, it is a matter of some importance that the doubt be forth-with removed if it be desired to attract capital for the development of the provincial forest resources.
