CAMPBELLTON, N. B. DEC. 24, 1925

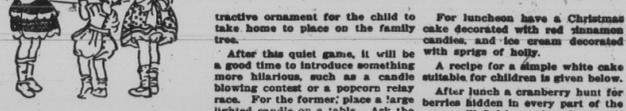

1926 PROSPECTS

The Financial Post reports that the dominant factor in the current business situation is the confidence with which business leaders are moulding their plans for 1926. In support of this opinion it quotes the head of one of the largest advertising agencies as saying: "Just now there are so many indications of better business ahead that it would take considerable space to list them but one of the most significant is the general disposition of manufacturers to plan confidently and considerably for bigger sales. Already a number of our largest clients have increased their advertising appropriations for 1926 and there is every indication that the number of national advertisers and the volume of advertising for next year will show an increase over 1925."

THE CITY OF TOMORROW

Some startling ideas have been put forward as to cities of the future—skyscraper buildings running to a height we know nothing of at the present day, several of them at various levels far above the ground. A city would thus be in layers, one above the other, and connected at intervals by means of perpendicular street cars, or electric elevators. It is not an altogether new idea. In Toronto it has been proposed more than once that the street level on Yonge street should be given over entirely to vehicular traffic and the sidewalks raised one storey. In the Toronto Star there appeared a year or so ago drawings showing the city of the future with all the street levels used by trolleys and motors and elevated sidewalks at various heights above the ground and connecting the different skyscrapers. It is not likely, however, that the city of the future will be like that. There is a very direct connection between congestion of population and lack of transportation. The skyscraper, to some extent, resulted from the fact that the electric elevator for use in buildings improved more rapidly than the trolley service for transporting the public. Also it was easier to go to the fifteenth floor of the building you were in, than to go two or three blocks to another building. There is

CHRISTMAS PARTY for The Children

CHRISTMAS time is the children's time. It means holidays from school, parties, excitement, and thrills. The events planned for this time of year take on a festive atmosphere like no other party. The spirit of joy is in the air and is reflected by the children in their simple games.

When you are arranging a party for the youngsters be sure to provide for every minute of the time. A Christmas party should never be dull or uninteresting, for there are so many fascinating things to do.

As soon as all the guests have assembled, give each one a small envelope branch set in a pot of earth, a collection of colored paper, scissors, a tube of paste, some tinsel and tiny candies with holders and proceed to have a Christmas tree-winning contest. As an award for the prettiest tree, it would be appropriate to give some very attractive ornament for the child to take home to place on the family tree.

After this quiet game, it will be a good time to introduce something more hilarious, such as a candle blowing contest or a popcorn relay race. For the former, place a large lighted candle on a table. Ask the contestant to stand directly in front of it, then place a blindfold over the eyes and ask him to turn around three times and then try to blow out the candle. For the popcorn race, divide the crowd into two sides. Have two long, strong threads with a coarse needle at one end and a large knot at the other, held up by persons at each end of the strings. A bowl of popped corn is placed on a table near the needles. At a given signal the first child from each line runs up to the bowl, takes a kernel of corn, strings it on the needle, and shoves the kernel to the other end of the string, then the next child in line does likewise until one side has finished.

Another good Christmas game consists of throwing cotton balls through a holly wreath. In this way it can be arranged for a prize among the individual contestants.

For luncheon have a Christmas cake decorated with red cinnamon candies and ice cream decorated with sprigs of holly.

A recipe for a simple white cake suitable for children is given below.

After lunch a cranberry hunt for berries hidden in every part of the room will finish up the afternoon's fun.

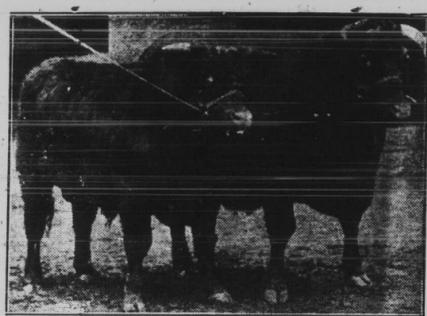

Overweight White Cake

1 cup Sugar
1/2 cup Crisco
2 cups Flour
1/2 teaspoon Salt
1 teaspoon Baking Powder
3 Eggs whites
1/2 cup Milk
1 teaspoon Vanilla

Cream Crisco. Add sugar gradually. Stir in alternately milk and sifted dry ingredients. Fold in thoroughly stiffly beaten egg whites and vanilla. Turn batter into two greased layer pans. Bake in a moderate oven 250° F.

less reason now than ever there was in the past for concentrating people, either for business or residential purposes on a small area. The motor car gives rapid individual support, and a man can run about and make half a dozen business calls in the downtown area in rapid succession. He can live 10 or 20 miles from his office and reach it as quickly as he did 25 years ago, when he resided only a mile or so away and walked to and fro.

It is the habit to think of the motor car as a vehicle that has reached its highest perfection. This is most probable. No doubt, for individual use there will appear a much smaller car costing far less and requiring reduced street room. A motive power vastly better and cheaper than the gasoline engine may be expected by the time it is urgently required. The tucking of cars away downtown—hanging them up out of the way when they are not needed—is a problem that nobody has seriously tackled as yet, nor will while cars can be left on the streets. Flying too, is in its infancy, and in due course business men will be flying to and from their offices, and a few miles will mean nothing. Can anyone doubt that flying will develop to this extent? With transportation making such progress as seems imminent one may feel justified in expecting to see cities not more, but less congested than in days of slower going.

THRIFT AND INHERITANCE

Highly thrifty parents too often have spendthrift children. It would almost seem that the inhibitions of the elders the desires denied in order to save money, sometimes break loose in the next generation.

Parents of only moderate—sometimes even meagre—means, curtailing their own simple pleasures to provide for their children advantages they themselves were denied, will find these children soon exhibiting a marked tendency toward extravagance. Never having had their parents' experience in saving money, never having tasted the sacrifices entailed, they spend it quickly and thoughtlessly. They are impatient if they are not permitted to satisfy every wish of the moment. Their spending habits often cause dissension between themselves and their parents.

But despite ingratitude and disrespect, most parents retain for their children an affection and concern over their welfare that extends even beyond the grave. "When I am gone," the speculation of what will happen them often saddens the declining years of parents who had little enjoyment themselves, but worked hard to give their children a fair start in life. Knowing their children's weaknesses they want to save them from the consequences, even in the years to come when they will themselves have passed beyond earthly cares.

In some instances they recognize in their children the same traits that, indulged by some ancestor, were responsible for their own early poverty. There may be an inherited talent that shows itself in an unscrupulous temptation to gambling or speculation. It may be an utter irresponsibility concerning money that displays itself in wastefulness or extravagance.
