But, the better to con-bil some fine morning ere the Britishers were out of their beds. But, the better to conwere out of their beds. But, the better to con-ceal his real plan, and to throw the British Government all wrong, he had a tremendous naval armament ready at Boulogne, which, however, was never intended to be used. Fifteen hundred war-like vessels, carrying several thousand pieces of cannon, had been prepared at an immense expense: but all this was merely a blind. The army, embarked on the transports, was to be the attacking force, and its movement across was to be covered by the combined fleet under Admiral Villeneuvs. A note written by Napoleon's own hand at the note written by Napoleon's own hand at the me is still on record, and part of it makes in

"I wished to assemble forty or fifty ships on the line in the harbor of Martinique, by operation he line in the harbor of Martinique, by opera-ions combined in the harbors of Toulon, Cadiz, Derrol and Brest; to bring them suddenly back to Boulogne; to find myself in this way, dur-ng fifteen days, the master of the sea; to have 50,000 men encamped on the coast; three or bour thousand vessels in the flotilla, and to set and constant vessels in the flotilla and to see and the moment the signal was given of the prival of the combined fleet. That project has failed. If Admiral Villeneuve, instead of en-ering the harbor of Terrol, had contented immelf with joining the Spanish squadron, at instantly made sail for Brest and joined immiral Gantheaume, my army would have

Gantheaume, my army would d. and it was all over with Engl During April, 1805, Nelson was anxiouslyllook-g, sometimes along the coast of Spain, and pmetimes along the coast of Africa, for the ombined fleets, but could get no sight of them His force was only ten sail of the line and three rigates, while the enemy had eighteen sail of he line and ten frigates; nevertheless he was the ine and ten ingates nevertherees he was the pursuer and they the pursued. May 5 he received certain information that Villeneuve had sailed for the West Indies. He immediate-ly followed, the French admiral having then nirty days the start. On May 28 the French and Spanish fleets, obeying secret orders started on their return to the shores of Europe Willeneuve's orders were by all means to avoid battle with Nelson, but to get back to Europe while the latter was looking for him around the West Indies or South America. At Terrol h was to be joined by five French ships and to Spanish, and at Brest by twenty-one mon ned by five French ships and ten inder Gantheaume.

Nelson, who had been puzzled out of mind by the persistent keeping away of the comhined fleet from his own, which was so much smaller, at last got some suspicion of what was up, and despatched several fast-sailing vessels, taking different tracks across the Atlantic, warn the British Government. His fleet saile or Europe, too, and arrived off Gibraltar July B. But Admiral Collingwood, then crossing near the great fortress with a small squadron, had with great signify penetrated Napoleon's real design before Nelson's return, and had written to the latter what might almost pass for a copy of Villeneuve's orders. But mean-time one of Nelson's fast despatch vessels had already outsailed the combined fleet, arriving at London July 9. The Admiralty had its warning. and acted with great vigor and promptitude. An indecisive naval entage ment took place west of Cape Finisterre; by this time the wooden walls of old England this time the wooden walls of old England were nearing home from all quarters, and England's panic of 1805 was over. The batic of Trafalgar followed a little later on, October E, when the combined fleet was annihilated. But what did Napoleon do when he saw that his grand invasion of England project. had failed! He immediately did armethicar alay has his grand invasion of England project had fulled? He immediately did something else; he turned the "army of England" against Austria instead, and started on the campaign of Aus-terliz. Which may suggest to us the possibil-ity that in these days a French army profes-sedly destined for the invasion of England may uddenly be jurned against Germany, or vice sersa. Or that a Russian army, supposed to be designed for southeastern Europe, may sud ed for southeastern Europe, may sudnly be hurried into Asia, or vice versa again.
