DO DIVERS SEE GHOSTS?

Strange Stories Told By Those Who Work on Wrecks at the Bottom of the Sea

Considering the number of people who have found a last resting place at the bottom of the sea, it is not surprising that divers should occasionally come across what are popularly known as ghosts. A diver, while employed one day in bringing up various articles from the wreck of the "Royal George," which went down off Spithead on August 28, 1782, being seized with sudden fits of drowsiness, fell asleep. He dreamed three times in succession that just as he was about to pick up a curiously wrought silver dish from among a mass of debris, a very tall figure, dressed in a diving suit, sprang at him and tried to cut the lifeline. As at this time the other two men he was working with were both of short stature not in the least degree like the figure in his dreams, he soon forgot it. But great was his trepidation one morning when on turning up at his work he found one of his mates absent, and a newcomer—a very tall man—in his place. Indeed, so alarmed was he that, on descending he took with him a stout cudgel, and warned those in charge of the communication rope to be on the alert for a signal, however slight. On arriving at the bottom he soon at work on the wreck, and amid a pile of loose spars, he came upon a dish exactly like the one he had seen in his dreams. He was staring at it in a kind of dazed fashion, when suddenly he saw his companion the new diver coming toward him, just as he had seen the figure in his dreams, and the next moment he was engaged in the most desperate struggle of his life. He succeeded in administering such a severe blow on the hand of the latter dropped his knife with which he had been armed, and before he could pick it up again our friend the dreamer had pulled the communication cord, and was drawn up out of danger. It subsequently transpired that the new diver had gone raving mad. Another curious case occurred not so many years ago off the coast of Galway. Some divers were employed in looking for the remains of Spanish treasures, when one of their party, wandering a little apart from the rest, saw a dim light in the distance. Advancing toward it, he discovered that it proceeded from the porthole of a wreckage of very ancient date. Approaching the ship, not without trepidation, he peeped in, and saw, to his amazement, an old man, with a very long beard, kneeling down examining an iron clasped oaken chest. By and by he raised the lid, and dipping his hands in, drew them out full of golden coins, which he played with like a child plays with some new toy. The diver, happening at this juncture to make a noise the old man turned slowly round, revealing a face of the most ghastly pallor, which so terrified the diver that he turned tail and fled back to his mates, with far more haste than dignity. Poooh pooohing his story, they went back with him, and there, sure enough, in the very spot he had described, was the ship, and what was even more wonderful, the chest of gold. Lastly, there is the case of the diver who was repairing one of the London bridges. He had made his descent into the water, and was kneeling down examining the masonry, when he felt something tap him on the shoulder. He looked round, when in his utmost terror he saw a man, at his shoulder, peering down at him, an exact counterpart of himself. The following day, against the advice of his wife, who was a seer and very superstitious, he again went down in the same place, and a piece of loose masonry falling on him, he was killed.

HE KNEW HOW

There was an old geezer And he had a lot of sense. He started up a business On a dollar eighty cents. The dollar for stock, And the eighty for an ad. Brought him three lovely dollars In a day, by dad! Well, he bought more goods And a little more space, And he played that system With a smile on his face. The customers flocked To his two by four And soon he had to hustle For a regular store. Up on the square Where the people pass He robbed up a corner That was all plate glass. He fixed up the windows With the best that he had, And told them all about it In a half page ad. He soon had 'em coming And he never, never quit, And he wouldn't cut down On his ads one bit. And he's kept things humming In the town ever since, And everybody calls him The Merchant Prince.

A REAL LIVE TESTIMONIAL

Given to Professor Hamilton, of Hampton, N. S. Mavillette, Dighy Co., N. S. Oct. 4th, 1917

To Prof. B. S. Hamilton When I was 14 years of age a boy threw a stone which struck my hip bone, causing a running sore for 22 years, my leg got small and hurt me to walk, and I could not sleep on that side—pained all the time day and night. I tried different doctors home and in the States without success, some doctor's sent me to the hospital in New London, Conn., U. S. A., for operation, so they cut my leg 20 inches long and scraped the bone. They called it white abscess of the bone, and that did not heal nor cure. It kept getting worse and running all the time losing the use of my other leg, but thanks to Prof. Hamilton's skillful treatment the pain left my leg healed and developed to the size of my other leg and just as strong. No one knows how proud and thankful I am, and I would say to suffering and afflicted persons "if in their power try the Professor," as I feel confident that he has proved his skill above all others in my case, and let's cure different chronic cases considered incurable that the Professor has cured that I personally know.
