

funeral is over, I fear the kind lady's good nature will be taxed to its uttermost limits."

"America gratefully receives back the ashes of her distinguished son and citizen, and commits them to the earth. They are to mingle with the soil on which he was born, and for which he had such an affection. There is not a citizen of this country whose ear is not open to catch every syllable of the funeral-words. There is not a heart in the land that is not present at his open grave. He comes home to be enshrined. If we of this time would henceforth undertake a new pilgrimage, let it be to the burial-place of the man who has taught the world anew, as never man taught it before, how much more blessed it is to give than to receive. The name of Peabody is to stand, for the future, synonymous with Philanthropy. This single word shall be his lasting monument."
