FIXED UP LITTLE RED BOOK TO LOSE FOR "A PURPOSE"

Somewhat Remarkable Method of James McCormick to Furnish Material for the Enquiry.

The feature of the London conspiracy case before Magistrate Denison yesterday was the appearance of J. Walter Curry, K. C., as counsel for the defence.

All day long Mr. Curry raised various legal objections, and nonplussed the crown counsel to such an extent that Mr. DuVernet appealed to his worship towards the end of the sitting, and stated that what he termed were "gross interruptions" should be cut out for good.

To inform the attorney-general that he would withdraw from the case.

"I am not going to stand for it any longer," said Mr. DuVernet. "Just as soon as I get the witness to a point where he will tell something like the truth I learned from my friend interrupting me. I never saw your worship stand for such interruptions before, and I am sure you never had a crown counsel so good-natured as I am; but because I am good-natured, I do not purpose having this thing carried any further. When Mr. Curry wants to make an objection he should appeal for your worship's ruling."

"Mr. Curry," said the magistrate, "when you have any objection to make, tell it to me."

"All right, your worship," said Mr. Curry.

James McCormick of London, a Liberal worker, told a mysterious story of a little red memorandum book containing the names of voters, and amounts opposite their names, which he had fixed up a couple of months ago, and had the intention to bring it to the evidence at this investigation. The plot was a deeply laid one, of his own idea. Altho he stuck to his story throughout, the magistrate announced that he could not believe it, and Mr. DuVernet stated to the court that he wanted an order of committal. This the magistrate refused to grant on the ground that altho the witness' story was contradictory, there was not evidence enough to show perjury.

McCormick, however, was served with a further subpoena, and will appear in court this morning. It is not known what course the crown will pursue in the matter, but the intention is to bring certain witnesses to swear they received five-dollar bills from McCormick.

Frank Hutchison, the witness the Liberals want brought to Toronto, will be present to-day.

Charles Forbes of Ottawa was at the court yesterday, but was not called.

Handwriting Test.
Philip C. Lewis, brother of Tom Lewis, was the first witness called. He told the court that he had never taken part in the Hyman-Gray election, directly or indirectly.

Mr. DuVernet asked the witness to write "Arthur Redding, Oxford-street," but Mr. Curry objected and told the witness he did not need to write it if he did not wish to do so.

The Brockville case came up again when Brock Cowan was called, and asked by the counsel for the crown to identify Pritchett and Lewis. He could not identify either of the men.

Mr. Curry objected and told the witness he did not need to write it if he did not wish to do so.

Edward Shea, also of London, had held no money or envelopes during the election, nor had he paid out any money for an election purpose.

Philip Lewis, recalled, said that he would write the address. He did so.

"Is that the way you always write?"

"Will you swear that you did not write this envelope?"

"Certainly."

"If Arthur Redding says that you did it?"

"I did not."

Another brother of Tom Lewis was called, John Lewis, proprietor of the Metropolitan Hotel. He denied absolutely that he had ever taken part in any election, or handled or paid out any money at any time.

Thomas F. Marshall, another London voter, was sure that he had received no money.

Mr. DuVernet asked if James McCormick said that he had paid him (witness) $5, what would he say.

"If he does, he is a liar," was the frank answer of the witness.

Got Money to Bribe.
Raphael MacNab of Brockville recalled the Comstock-White election, and recalled giving the hotel-keeper, Wendling, $20 to give to voters. The money came from a man in the committee-room, a stranger.

"How much did you get altogether?"

"Fifty or sixty dollars."

"For what?"

"For buy voters."

"How many did you buy?"

"I don't know, but I paid ten per voter."

"Look at O'Gorman," said the counsel. "Did he give you the money and ballots?"

"I could not say."

"Did you meet a man by that name?"

"Yes, I think I did, in the committee-room."

Witness could not identify O'Gorman. He admitted that he looked after the "French contingent." There were about 75 of these; about half had been paid.

The Little Red Book.
James M. McCormick of London arrived at the court ten minutes late. He was the chairman of Liberal committee No. 5, Ward 2, during the Hyman-Gray election.

"Did you keep any record or memoranda, etc.?" asked Mr. DuVernet. After some hesitation, he said, "No."

"Why did you hesitate?" asked the magistrate.

"I did not hesitate," answered the witness.

"Yes you did," asserted his worship. Witness then admitted that he kept a small red memorandum book. He remembered it well, because the book was stolen from him.

"What was it kept for?" asked the magistrate.

"To produce the book, it will show," said the witness.

"Tell me what was in the book," said the magistrate, "for you know all about it."

"Just a few of my own ideas."

"Did it contain a list of voters?" asked Mr. DuVernet.

"Yes."

"Did it contain a list of voters who were paid, and a list of the initials of the men who paid them?"

"I don't think so."

"You ought to be able to tell us," said his worship.

"I am entitled to see the book," said McCormick.

"To who?"

"No one."

"Why did you not come here in time this morning?"

"I should not be here at all. My doctor advised me to stay in bed."

"Who advised you to-day on this subject?"

"No one."

"Did you see any of the defendants to-day?"

"No."

"You made the entries in this book?"

"Lost it for a Purpose."

"Yes, I made the entries in the book less than three months ago and lost the book, so it might be produced at this investigation."

"Why did you do this?"

"I did it for a purpose. There was going to be an investigation," continued the witness. "Mayor Judd knew it."

"Did he tell you?"

"No."

"Who told you?"

"I refuse to answer."

Magistrate and Counsel.
Magistrate Denison and Mr. Curry, who appeared for the defendants, had a hot argument as to whether the book and the witness' evidence was material. The magistrate ruled it was material, and asked the witness if he wanted to be let down for a time.

Mr. Curry jumped up. "You will have to try him before you send him down."

"I believe this man is committing perjury," said the magistrate.

"If he doesn't answer the question I shall ask for an order of committal," added Mr. DuVernet.

"Go ahead," said Mr. Curry.

"Did you mean the book to be a truthful record for this investigation?"

"Yes."

"It is true in so far that I wrote it."

"Were the statements you wrote true?"

"No, they were not true. I just did it for a purpose. They were trying to trip up people in the north end of the ward for this enquiry."

The magistrate asked Mr. DuVernet to produce the book, which witness identified as the book he wrote two months ago.

Counsel asked witness to read the first page, which gave a list of committal names.

"How many voters that you got the record of for this book received money?"

"I don't know."

"You did not intend by this record that voters had been paid money?"

"No."

Paid No One.
"Did you pay anyone money, or envelopes, or get any money from any one?"

"No."

"Did you pay any of the scrutineers?"

"No."

"Did you put down in the book what they were paid?"

"I don't think so."

"Did you make the book up for the purpose of making an untruthful statement?"

"No."

Original Was Stolen.
Mr. DuVernet then went over the names entered on the books, but no new light was thrown on the matter by the witness, who contended that he put the names in the book two months ago. It was part of a copy of his original book.

"Isn't that the original book?" asked the magistrate.

"No, that's the new book. It was stolen from me."

"What was the purpose?"

Mr. Curry interrupted and the crown counsel objected to his interruptions. Mr. DuVernet maintained that he had a perfect right to interrupt and could see no material evidence adduced from witness.

"It just takes longer," said the magistrate.

"For what purpose did you mark it?" was asked the witness.

"My own purpose."

"What was that?"

"Simply to see if the book would not turn up here."

"Do you know a man called A. Redding?" asked Mr. DuVernet.

"Yes."

"His name is here and opposite it the initials 'P. L.' Who is P. L.?"

"I don't know."

"Not Peter Lewis?"

"No! I swear to that. I don't know who P. L. was."

"It's so long ago," said the magistrate, trying to trip up the witness.

North Toronto.

The Davisville Young Men's Club have organized two hockey clubs, intermediate and junior. Herb Holden is manager and Frank McCrea captain for the intermediate and James Fitzpatrick for the juniors.

The North Toronto Hockey Club will hold their third annual concert in the town hall to-night.

Herbert Darling has bought the property, house and fixtures on the northeast corner of Yonge-street and Eglinton, near Uxbridge, where Miss Eva May Terry, sister of Mr. Terry and Mrs. W. J. Moses of Eglinton, was married to Robert C. Lawrence of Eglinton, yesterday morning. A reception was held at the residence of the groom's father, Stephen Lawrence, Castlefield-avenue last night, to which the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were invited, and Mrs. Lawrence will reside at Eglinton.

Dovercourt.

The ratepayers of Dovercourt district have decided to materially increase their school accommodation. The Dufferin-street school will receive an addition of two rooms, and altho the new schoolhouse below Davenport-road has been built only one year it will be increased by four rooms.

The Ratepayers' Association have interviewed ex-council John Wainless to run for deputy reeve in the coming municipal election. Mr. Wainless, however, has decided that he will not again run for municipal honors.

Great Credit Sale.

The undersigned has received instructions from H. J. Jirkins to sell by public auction on Nov. 14, 1906, at Jas. Kennedy's Hotel, Woburn, at one o'clock, viz.: 2 splendid French mares, black; 1 colt, 3 years old; 1 colt, 2 years; 4 fresh-calving cows, 15 calved cows in full flow of milk; 20 forward and backward springers, 15 two-year-old steers and heifers, 10 yearlings, 13 spring calves, 10 spring pigs. Ten months' credit will be given on approved paper for all sums over $10; 5 per cent. allowed for cash. The above stock is a grand lot. D. Beland, auctioneer.

Banquet to Bandmen.

An enthusiastic entertainment in the form of a smoking concert was tendered the Black Dike Band by the officers and members of the Yorkshire Society in the large S.O.E. Hall, Richmond-street. The premier of Ontario expressed his regret that his business prevented him from joining the band. The society, however, was honored by the presence of the mayor, Controllers Shaw and Jones and Aid. Church, who were cordially welcomed by John W. Carter, the president.
