BUILDING AND EXECUTIONS MARK RUSSIAN POLICY

Soviet Has Not Changed Its Unrelenting and Ruthless Policy Towards Political Foes, But Reconstruction Still Goes On—Speculators Continue to Flourish.

Riga, Sept. 27.—(A. P. by mail).—The cracking of the ribs of squads of executioners continues throughout Russia, and may be heard simultaneously with the tattoo of workmen's hammers engaged in the actual repair and reconstruction of buildings throughout the land.

Throughout Soviet Russia there is no today, nor goes on today, nor months, a single important uprising. The Communist control is tighter and more complete than ever. The Com- munist investigation is outworking, trying, and convicting various minor officials who accepted bribes, and is thus endeavoring to build up a bureaucratic machine which will operate strictly in accordance with orders from the Central Government.

The old Cheka has been abolished, and in its stead there has come up the organization known as the Political Police. The latter does not interfere in men's private lives, but in politics they are as omnipotent as ever. At one time the political police could shoot people first and try them afterward. Today the method is to have a preliminary trial first and then carry out the execution, or to send suspects into exile without trial.

To foreigners in Russia the leaders of the land is more superficial than really. They are not ashamed. They have confidence in the policy of doing things the Russian way, and they are coming, and they apparently are succeeding, slowly and painfully, in reconstructing Russia, but along the way they are not without any important sacrifice of principle.

The evidence of reconstruction in the land is more superficial than really. Streets are being repaired, buildings are being reconstructed, and railroad passenger traffic is becoming normal. Industrial plants, however, if in no worse condition than a year ago, certainly are in no better shape. These plans need foreign capital, but lacking this on terms to which the Communists can consent, the government is ready to wait until it has a surplus of exports from agriculture. This it hopes for in 1923, and then thereafter it sees money with which it will be able to establish industries itself.

In the meantime, with evidence at hand of enough food to feed practically the entire population; with a fuel supply exceeding that of last year, and with textile works producing a considerable amount of clothing, the government expects the population to be fed, and warmed, and clad, not necessarily very well, but still well enough to weather another year without foreign loans.

To feed the few hundred thousands of people who still suffer from the Russian famine, the government still looks to foreign aid. This will permit it to devote most of the available fam- ine and church treasure funds to constructive agricultural betterment, and to the purchase of harvesting machine- ry, horses, etc.
