The following verses, a mixture of wine, so mer, and ginger beer, were found in t'e vest Jocket of a young Templar, who was sick.

An Idyl by an Idler. Fill high the bowl with Samian wine, A brimming glass to summer flowers, Drink deep, while sunbeams brightly shine, And dance the joyous happ; hours.

The wine's empurpling, sparkling tide, Gives back the splendors of the sun, Reflects again the summer days It. Unshed beside the broad Garonne.

Imprisoned in its blood-red stream Are boyhood's dieams - too bright last, And fettered 'neath its rosy wave, The sea-shell echoings of the past,

Away! the cup that foams and glows Dash down the bowl of Samian wine, For in the glass of youth their glows, A tairer Lesbium, more divine.

What need the wine, when blashing roses Sway beneath the west winds breath, Away the vine, for June's soft breeze Are earth's soul-a life in death.

Like the doomed in Aztec story * Ere the dreadful sacrifice. Summer stands her vesture glorious Glowing with the rainbow's dyes.

Thine are the flowers sweet June, The violet blooming in the sylvan shade, Thine the soft light, that in the forest glow Thine ev'ry dream that leafs the lon'ly glade.

Thine are the cloudless skies, and starry eves The dews, the sunsets, and the showers; Thine the long days; and angel smiles That linger in thy crown of flowers-
