LONDON, July 20, 1887.

Gentlemen—I have had the great honor to receive your invitation to attend the approaching celebration of the centenary of the American constitution. The attractions of this ivitation are enhanced to me by the circumstance that I have always regarded that constitution as the most remarkable work known to me in modern times to have been produced by the human intellect, at a single stroke (so to speak), in its application to political affairs.

The invitation has also been accompanied with every accessory which even considered in the settlement of the Fisheries question, and that the British Commissioners will sapport this view.

Restored.

Mrs. J. M. Phalen, of Sydney Mines, N. S., had chronic rheumatism for two years, and got no relief until she tried Burdock Blood Bitters. Two bottles cured her. "I was like a skeleton," says she "before using B. B., now thauks to the discovery of such a valuable remedy, I am entirely restored to health."

ONE of the prosecution of a great work at home. I regard the Irish question as the most full of the promise of widely beneficial results for my country in which I have ever been engaged. I have therefore no remaining fund of time or capacity for public exertion on which to draw.

I ought perhaps to add that, viewing the jealousies prevalent at that time in England, I am doubtful whether those jealousies might not for the moment be stimulated were I to accept the distinction you offer me, which is not less signal than undeserved.

Newport society is divided over the question of the reception of the Duke of Marlborough. One section admits it is eager to be patronized by the Duke, while the other is equally determined to ignore him, and the "charmed circle" is consection with State affairs is dedicated to the prosecution of a great work at home. I regard the Irish question as the most full of the promise of widely beneficial results for my country in which I have ever been engaged. you oner me, which is not recessful visual undeserved.

The first of these reasons, however, is that which removes from me freedom of moral choice in this matter, and compels me to decline the most flattering proposa

I ever have received. I shall watch, gentlemen, with a profound interest the proceedings at your celebration, when you will have to look back upon a century of national advancement without a parallel in history and to look forward to its probable continuance upon a still larger scale, with an accumulation of high duties and responsibilities proportioned to an ever growing power.

That you and your children may be enabled by the Almighty worthily to meet them is and will be, I am confident, the praver of your kinsmen on this side the WILL WATCH FROM AFAR.

Modern Prodigal Sons. No, my son, it isn't that the world has grown hardhearted: it isn't that we aren't just as glad to-day to see the prodigal come back, and just as lovingly anxious to welcome him home as ever was anybody. It come him home as ever was anybody. It is the manner in which the prodigal son of 1887 frequently returns that throws a wet blanket over the festivities of the welcome. When he comes down the road with his hat hanging on his ear and his hands in his pocket: when he kicks his faithful old house deg as he lounges in at the gate; when he calls his father "gov'nor" and the hired man "Cull?" when he wants to know "What's for dinner?" before he has been in the house fifteen minutes: when he gives his elder brother Mowing Machine Oil, Cow Bells. defore he has been in the house fifteen minutes; when he gives his elder brother two fingers to shake and advises him to comb the hayseed out of his hair, when he throws himself into the easiest chair in the house, perches his feet on the window sill and announces that he'll 'take a tub before dinner;' when he comes back with a generally forgiving air of good-fellowship about him, and tries to make all the rest of the family very easy and reassured about him, and tries to make all the rest of the family very easy and reassured—then it is, my son, that your father longs to run and meet you while you are yet a great way off, and fall upon your neck with a plough line and welt you into a state of becoming humility and penitonee by the time you are able to take off your hat to the bound boy and crawl up the front steps to ask your brother to shake hands with you. Good people are just as glad to-day as ever they were, my son to see the prodigal come home, but it does rattle them a little to see him come home in a hack and ask them to pay the sdriver and send for his baggage.—Burdette.
