TOY POWER BOAT? IT'S EASY;
JUST LEMME TAKE YOUR KNIFE

Why not a toy power boat, boys and girls? They're as easy as falling off a log. You might try the "Mississippi packet" first. It's simplest. Take a thin piece of board, about four inches wide and eight or ten long, and with a sharp jack-knife whittle one end of it down to a blunt point. In the center of the stern—the other end—cut a notch about three-quarters of an inch wide and two inches long. Then take two pieces of wood, one-half inch wide by one and one-half inches long, and notch them in the center so they will dovetail together and make your paddle wheel. Now take a stout rubber band and fit the paddle wheel together over the center of it—so an equal length hangs out on each side. Drive a small nail through the center of the wheel to make it hold secure. Notch the outside of the stern, on a line with the center of the hole you have cut in it. Slip in the paddle wheel and throw the loops over the notches. Twist the wheel on its rubber band axle around backwards as far as you think the strength of the rubber will permit. Holding the wheel tightly, drop into the water you want to sail your Mississippi packet. Release the wheel and away she'll sail—until the rubber band unwinds. Then wind it up and start her off again—and so on. You may find that the weight of the paddle lifts the bow of your packet out of the water. If you want to overcome that, make a little cabin of cardboard, or an old cigar box, and set it up near the bow. Now for the bigger and more complicated boat:

Whittle out a boat shape along the lines of your packet out of a thick piece of wood. Then cut a big round hole the size of an ordinary paper mailing tube in the center (Fig. 1). Through each side and into the big hole, bore two holes half an inch in diameter (Fig. 2). Next cut a round piece of wood (Fig. 3) a little less than half an inch in diameter, and long enough to project an inch or so beyond each side of the boat when thrust through the small hole (Fig. 2). This is going to be your propeller axle. Then cut out of tin with an old pair of shears eight propeller blades (Fig. 4) about an inch and a half long. Make four longitudinal slits an equal distance apart in one end of the axle, and drive four of the propeller blades in these slits. Shove the other end of the axle through the small hole in the side of the boat, and then mount the remaining four blades on the other side of the craft. Next get your mailing tube (Fig. 7). Mount it in the big hole (Fig. 1). If it is so long as to make the boat top-heavy, cut sections off it until you get it to balance. Then drive a small wire nail through the tube close to its top (Fig. 6). From it to the axle (Fig. 3) stretch and tie a rubber band, or better, a piece of elastic cord such as they fasten girls' hats with (Fig. 5). To make your mailing tube smokestack secure, run a piece of stout twine (Fig. 8) from its top to the bow of the boat. Now you have a power boat, run on the same principle as the Mississippi packet. To make it go, just wind up the rubber or elastic, see it in water, and let'er go Gullagher.

GERMAN'S DAILY LIFE

BIG SERIES OF FINES

Humorous Journal Points Out How Average Citizen Breaks 19 Laws a Day

BERLIN, May 10—Police fines to the amount of $2,500,000 are annually inflicted in Germany. To explain how this large sum is accumulated, the Munich humorous journal Jugend enumerates the misdemeanors committed in a single day by a respectable tradesman, costing him $30.75 and a week's imprisonment.

On rising in the morning he opens the window. The window is violently blown back by the wind, breaking the glass, which falls into the street. Fifty cents fine.

While at breakfast he fills in the necessary forms to report to the police that he had engaged a maid-servant a week previously. For not having reported her within the specified time of three days, $1.25 fine.

On his way to business he runs after a tramway car. For jumping on to the car while in motion, $1.25 fine.

His goods are so effectively displayed in his shop windows that an obstruction is caused by the crowd in the street. Two dollars and a half fine.

His window dresser has displayed some articles in such a manner that the merchant's Christian name on the signboard was hidden. One dollar and a quarter fine.

At noon he returns home by railway and loses his season ticket. One dollar and a half fine.

He is awakened from an after-dinner nap by the government inspector of the Old-age Pension and Insurance Department to whom he has to produce the insurance card and the stamps correctly, but has forgotten to cancel them. Two dollars and a half fine.

Then he receives a visit from a constable, who informs him that his child was vaccinated two days after the regulating time. Five dollars fine.

Cycling back to business he is stopped by a constable for having forgotten his bicycle card (75 cents). He is stopped again for riding too fast (75 cents). A third constable stops him for riding on a sidewalk (75 cents). A fourth stops him for not sounding his bell properly (75 cents). A fifth, because he had no brakes, (75 cents). A sixth, for having removed his feet from the pedals (75 cents). A seventh constable, he is stopped for not holding the handlebars (75 cents).

He returns home from business in the twilight and is reported for having no light (75 cents).

After supper he plays piquet with his wife, using cards which do not bear imperial duty stamp. Seven dollars and a half fine.

Having failed to appear at the drill of the fire brigade ($2.50), he retires to bed tired out, and forgets to lock the door of his bedroom window. One week's imprisonment.

CHILDREN HEAR

A FINE LECTURE

The services in connection with the 125th anniversary of St. Andrew's Church were opened last evening when the children of the church, led by David Lang, the speaker, described the first part of the life of Christ, including his infancy, childhood, baptism and temptations, and also the parable of the prodigal son.

The illustrations were beautiful and the address was much appreciated by the young people. At 7:30 o'clock this evening and on Thursday, Mr. Lang will continue his instructions. A special programme of music will again be rendered. The elaborate programme for the services promises to be fulfilled to the letter. Eminent speakers will occupy the pulpit at the services and special music will be given.

Sheriff Holden was instrumental in putting an end to a desperate attempt for liberty made by Samuel Adams, who is awaiting sentence in the jail at Benton. The prisoner had succeeded in forcing open the window of his cell. He was only discovered at eleven o'clock yesterday morning, when Sheriff Holden went to bring him into court. Had it been a few hours later the prisoner would have gained his liberty. Adams entered the court room attired in a convict's uniform and pleaded guilty to the charge.
