flower stand of some sort that can be readily moved from window to win dow is, therefore, a necessity. The old fashioned wooden ones are clumsy heavy, and take up too much room. This modern wire-frames are pretty and light; but one of moderate size costs tell or twelve dollars, which is a great delto put in the stand when we wish to put it in the flowers.

We saw something, the other day, that seemed to serve both economy and convenience. A box three feet long, a foot and a half wide across the bottom, and eighteen inches deep, is made of common pine. The sides flare outward, so that, at the top, they measure six or eighlinches more, from edge to edge, than at the bottom. This box stands en four legs with casters, and under the bottom legs with casters, and under the bottom of the box, a piece of wood fancifully out on the edge (a sort of pine valance), holds the legs firmly and symmetrically together. The top of the box is nearly even with the window-sill, and, when the whole is constructed, it may either be painted in colors, or stained dark brown o match the furniture wood. The inside of the box is better preserved from de-cay, if lined with zinc or tin; but it will cay, if lined with zinc or tin; but it will last one, possibly two seasons, without any lluing at all. Over the bottom is spread a three-inch layer of bits of broken flower-pots, and on this is set a double row of pots, or as many as will stand evenly on the surface. Then a thick layer of sand is poured over the broken pieces, and the rest of the space filled up with earth till it is even with the top of the flower-pots. In the bed thus formed, bulbs and slips are planted between the pots, and vines are started at the corners. When the latter are well under way, wires, on which the vines twist are fastened diagonally from corner to corner, wires, on which the vines twist, are fast-ened diagonally from corner to corner, forming a beautiful, green arch over what seems to be a bed taken bodily from the garden. Sometimes a tiny hanging bask-ck, or an ivy growing in water, is hung from where the wires cross in the arch, but, even without it, there is no appear-ance of bareness. A carpenter will make the box for two dollars and a half, and the rest, painting and all, can readily be done at home.—"Home and Society;" Scribner's for February. Exercise; An Illustration.

We will hold by each other, and all will go well."—f'No," says his friend. "I have lost my breath already: each wave that strikes us knocks it from my body. If you reach the shore,—and God grant you may!—tell my wife I remembered her as I die;l. Good-by! God bless you!" and he is gone. There is nothing his companion can do for him. For him self, all he can do is to swim, and then float, and rest himself, and breathe; to swim again, and then. float, and rest himself, and breathe; to swim and float, with that steady, calm determination that he will go home; that no blinding spray shall stille him, and no despair weaken him,—hour after hour, till at last the palm-trees show distinct upon the shore, and then the tall reeds, and then the figures of animals.
