

agreed Representative

lies at the root of a right adjustment of industrial relations.

C 12209

Circumstances ^{must} will determine how far it ^{is} ~~may~~ advisable and possible for labor or the Community to share with Capital the ownership of a business, and how far ^{is} ~~may~~ possible and advisable for either or both to control and direct its management. ^{The really important consideration is} But whatever renders it impossible or inadvisable for ^{the} one or the other to actively participate in the discharge of functions other than that which is

(see below
p 229)

written 9
10/11

The
assertion of industrial rights in a form in which their existence admits of no uncertainty constitutes a foundation stone in the evolution of industrial freedom just as the assertion of political rights was a foundation stone in the evolution of political freedom. Once successful in having rights asserted, a struggle for their maintenance has continued, and the age long conflict between domination and freedom has led to the evolution of new forms of free institutions.

C 12210

With these struggles have been associated all the efforts to obtain ^{right of petition} freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, the liberty of the press, ^{before a jury} and the use of the ballot.

C 12211

How better can this vast aim be realized than by seeking in the government of the State to hold true to those principles of representation on which constitutional liberty is founded, and by extending the same principles to industrial government in so far as with wisdom they can be applied?

C 12212