

“It will be a pleasure to have the volume on the same shelf with Mr. Watts-Dunton’s charming song-sequence in the Romany dialect, ‘The Coming of Love,’ with which it has some affinity. . .”

“May I congratulate you on ‘The Sentimental Bloke’? The hour I had with him last night was indeed well spent. A more delicious piece of work I do not know. From every standpoint it is good, and that is a triumph, is it not? You have done something that sweetens life. . . .”

“‘Oh, gimme air!’ but isn’t it a fresh, daring, delightful piece of work? Quite unique too in conception and treatment, and star-pricked, like a clear night sky, with real genius. And it is the genius which includes all the qualities almost that one likes to see in genius—beauty, humour, tenderness, gaiety, keenness of observation, truth to character; and beneath these qualities a sure vision of the goodness in man and the wisdom in women which need but the coming of love for their awakening. . . .”

“‘Mick’ ought to be remembered proudly as long as the memory of ‘The Great War’ lasts. The sheer creative faculty in it is extraordinary. . . .”

“The book is a book, and a true book is worth reading many times. . . .”
