Sunshine grates have maximum strength

Sunshine Furnace has four triangular grate bars, each having three distinct sides. In the single-piece and two-piece grate no such-like provision is made for expansion or contraction, and a waste of coal always follows a shaking.

On the left- and right-hand sides are cotter pins, which when loosened permit the grates to slide out. These four grate bars are made of heavy cast iron, and are finished up with bulldog teeth. The teeth will grind up the toughest clinker; and because the grates are made in sections, not only can nothing but dust and ashes pass through, but after each shaking a different side can be presented to the fire. Also, with the Sunshine grate there is no back-breaking movements attached to the shaking. By gently rocking the lever, first on the left and then on the right, the ashes are released on both sides, and fall through the pan.

McClary's

THE SPICE OF LIFE.

Small Henry had been questioning his mother about the mysteries of death, and was greatly concerned to hear that people who went to heaven couldn't take along their bodies. He was in the middle of the following night crying bitterly. His mother hastened to his bed. "Henry, Henry, what in the world is the matter with you?" With many sobs and groans the child managed to tell his woe: "O, mother, I don't want to go to heaven without my stommie."

As Mrs. Brown was going away for the day, she told her colored maid, Ella, that she might have a holiday, too, but that she must lock the house up securely and put the silver away in a safe place.

When Mrs. Brown came back in the late afternoon, her feelings may be imagined as she read the following note pinned to the front door:

"Dear Mis Brown—I hid the silver secure under yure bed. Lovingly, Ella."

A certain couple in a New England village, each the parent of six children, recently had meted out to them a kind of poetic justice in which they failed to see the poetry.

The woman, a widow, pleading that she had no home, and was, therefore, unable to care for her children, induced the local authorities to admit them to an orphan asylum. The man, a widower, pleading he had no housekeeper, and, therefore, no one to care for his children, induced the authorities to admit his six also. Thereupon, being free from all incumbrances, these two married.

All went well for a few months, when the authorities, learning of the situation, promptly dispatched the twelve children back to their parents, and the woman, no longer able to represent herself as homeless, or the man without a housekeeper, they were forced to receive them.

THE RAZOR STROPPING HIMSELF.

When the train stopped at the little Southern station, the Northern tourist sauntered out on the platform. There were the usual number of sunbonneted women, tall "crackers" and stray hogs. Under a scrub oak stood a lean animal with scraggy bristles.

The tourist was interested. "What do you call that?" he queried of a lanky native.

"That ar' a hawg," elucidated the other.

"What kind of a hog?"

"Razohack hawg."

"That so?"

"Yes, that's so."

"Well, what is he doing rubbing against that tree?"

"He's stropping himself, mister, jest stropping himself, and if you ask any more foolish questions around here we'll pull you off the train." And the tourist wisely withdrew.

TRYING FOR A SIX-DAY HEN.

A facetious correspondent of the Toronto World informed that paper, according to a dispatch dated Guelph, July 4th, that an important scientific experiment was being conducted at the Agricultural College Poultry Department, based on the Darwinian theory of selection. It proceeds on the assumption that certain hens will be found that observe the Sabbath, laying only on six days a week, while certain roosters are believed never to crow on Sunday. When a sufficient number of hens have been secured, by selection, that are known positively never to lay eggs on the Sabbath, they will be mated with the best roosters selected for their seemly silence on the day of rest, and by continued rigid selection of the progeny, it is hoped to evolve a breed that will suit the most punctilious member of the Lord's Day Alliance.

"It is believed that the idea first came through the excuse of a little boy who was late for Sabbath school, and who said he had to gather the eggs. This being reported to the Alliance headquarters, led to the search for a six-day hen."
