REAR ADMIRAL CHICHESTER Saleswomen's Peril

British Officer Who Won Fame At Manila By Preventing Battle Between U. S. and German Fleets.

Rear Admiral Sir Edward Chichester died of pneumonia at Gibraltar the other day. He was fifty-seven years old. The body was taken to England on a war ship.

Sir Edward was born in 1849 and was made a rear admiral in 1902. He was chief of the sea transport, service during the South African war. His work in transporting a quarter of a serious consequences, because of Admiral Von Diederich's interference with the United States blockade. It was with the United States blockade. It was reported to the world soon afterward that Captain Chichester had prevented a battle between the German and United States fleets, which had both cleared for action, but it was not till May, 1899, at a dinner given by the Whitefriars Club, in London, to Mark Twain that Sir Edward bluntly gave his version of the critical incident. Not in his speech to the large assemblage, but to a party of Americans at his table he related, that "England's fleet at Manila stood ready to take sides with Dewey and to open fire—to begin war—on the Germans should occasion arise. Notice to the that effect war—on the Germans should occasion arise. Notice to the that effect was served on the German Admiral, and as an earnest of what the notice meant the British ships were moved into position between the German and American fleets so they might be in place to give efficient aid to the United States if necessary.

"We were ready to clear decks for action," Sir Edward continued. "I was 'with' Dewey all the time. Blood was thicker than water. If the German interference with Dewey had gone far enough Von Diederichs would have started a war not only with the United States, but with England. Von Diederichs understood that. Perhaps he noticed, too, that the English barges one day were filled with coal and the next day had but little. One night the American ships were recoaled without going to Hong Korg."

their dogs, but we have had dogs that such food always caused to suffer from skin disease.

Let your dog have water as often as he wants it.

Give your dog regular exercise. Do not take him out for an airing at the end of a chain—that is not exercise. Turn him loose and let him run. Exercise either before feeding or some time afterward, for exercise on a full stomach is likely to cause fits.

Do not wash your dog more than twice a month; if you keep his coat well combed and brushed, once a month will be often enough.

When washing use tepid water and some good dog soap, as in this way you will kill fleas and clean the dog at the same time. Rinse out the soap thoroughly and then douche the dog in cold water, after which rub dry.

If you keep the dog outside peovide a good dry kennel with a southern exposure and with clean bedding of wheel or rye straw. Change the bedding frequently and sprinkle a little oil of peppermint over the straw now and then—just enough to let you know it is there. If you can get the dry peppermint use that. It will help to keep the dog clear of fleas.

Remember that if the kennel is not clean and dry and cheerful, or if your dog is pampered and overfed, he will be likely to have distemper.

Marriage of a Seaman.

GRAVE DISEASES, DUE TO. STANDING Facts About Miss Merkley's Dangerous Illness and Complete Cure.

By FRANK H. SWEET

It is because most women suffer from some derangement of their delicate organism, the discomfort of which is less trying when they are in motion than when standing.

In some states laws compel employers to provide resting places for their female employees.

But no amount of iaw can regulate the hard tasks of these women. They must get the strength which this work demands or run the risk of serious diseases and the surgeon's knife.

Read about the experience of Miss Margret Merkley, 275 3d Street, Milwankee, Wis:—

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—
"Gradual loss of strength, nervousness, bearing-down pains and extreme irritation compelled me to seek medical advice. The doctor said I had diseased organs and ulceration, and advised an operation if I wanted to get well. I objected to this and decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. I soon found that all the sood things said about this great medicine were true. The ulceration soon healed, backache, headache and nervousness disappeared, and in a short time I was strong, vigorous and perfectly well. I wish every working girl who suffers would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."
Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a vegetable tonic which invigorates and strengthens the entire female organism, and will produce the same beneficial results in the cases of other sick women as with Miss Merkley. Dear Mrs. Pinkham:-

One Eyed Glants. Sir John Mandeville saw all sorts of queer things and wrote about them in his celebrated book of travels. It was in 1536 that the veracious John visited a certain group of isles (yles he called them) which was inhabited by a race of one eyed giants. Of them he says: "In one of these yles ben folk of grate stature, as giantes, and they been hide ous for to loke upon. An thei han but on eye, and that is in ye middyl of ye front" He also tells of another one of these "yles" inhabited by a race of one legged dwarfs, each having three eyes.

Proper Food to Give—How Often to Wash Them—The Kennel.

Remember that a dog digests. Its food very slowly, so should never have more than two meals a day when in health. For a house dog that gets little exercise one meal is sufficient.

The food should be plain, wholesome and nutritious. Above all things, saye Country Life in America, avoid preserves and sweetmeats of all kinds, sugar, hot toast, tea and other stuff of that kind.

Feed your dog regularly. If you give him one meal a day, let it be at midday; if two, morning and evening, and always at the same hour.

Let the animal eat until he is satisfied, for if he is fed regularly you need have no fear that he will gorge.

If your pet is to be kept in the house he will require very little meat—as mall plece every third day with a bone to gnaw on. A bone is a great aid to digestion and keeps the teeth in good condition.

Give bread soaked in meat gravy, biscult soaked in milk, oatmeal or rice or potatoes, and once or twice a week green vegetables. Woman is often referred to by man as "doubling his joys and halving his sorrows." That may be complimentary, but it would seem to be rather hard on the woman. For in plain terms it means that where things are going well with the man his wife makes them go better. But when things are gring ill with him, he expects his wife to share half his burden. And there's more truthshan poetry in this presentation of masculine selfishness. Men don't appeal to the fact that the strain of motherhood alone is a burden bigger than all the leads that rest upon male shoulders. They see the wife grow thin, pale, nervous and worn without a thought that she is over-bundened. Anong the plasant letters received by Dr. Pierce are those from hurbands who have waked up before it was too late to the crushing burdens! I'll up in the wife and in the search for help have found in Dr. Pierce's Euvorite Prescription a restorative which has given back to the mosher the health of the maiden and the maiden's happiness. "Favorite Prescription's laways cures. It has perfectly cured ninety-eight out of every hundred women who have used it when afflicted with diseases peculiar to women.

It was the dry season on the veldt, and the grass was burned down and and the grass was burned down and half covered with yellow dust. Not a kraal was to be seen or a habitation, not a tree or shrub so far as the eye could reach—only the ocher brown earth stretching away and at last ending in the same level sky lines to the north and south and east and west, and crossing the sun blistered waste one little animate dot, the canvas covered wagon of a Boer family trekking with the sheep and battle in search of a water course that had not dried up. For three days had the dot been moving across the waterless waste, and for three days had the sun left the thirsty sky line in the east only to glare down pitilessly until it dropped behind the equally thirsty sky line in the west, and now the tongues of the along for the trekkers' own use was exhausted. By the end of the second day they had expected to find water, but the stream counted on had proved but a dusty, sun dried depression, and for twenty-four hours they had followed its course, hoping to find some sink hole from which the water had not dried. Now they were pondering the necessity of seeking the next water course yet another twenty-four hours away. If that were dry also, what then?

Other families had trekked over this veldt before them, and more would follow, for this was the annual custom When the dry season came and burned every vestige of green from the home grazing land, the Boers would load their families into the great wagons, drawn by many spans of oxen, and, driving the sheep and cattle before them, seek the water courses that had not dried up. And there they would should come and transform the dry, barren veldt into a tropical garden. Then they would trek back home. Long before the sun rose for a new day of burning heat and thirst the dot of wagons and animals was ready for departure. But even as it began to crawl away from the river bed that was dry toward the one that might contain water, several of the mounted Boers who were circling about the cattle descried something less than a third of a mile away.

WELL," HE SAID HARSHLY, "WHAT DO YOU WANT?" nain as long as the drought lasted until weeks of steady and violent rains

In the dim light they at first thought it a wild animal, and examined their riaes; then, as the object drew near, they made it out to be a man, and that he was on foot instead of horseback. But it was not until he had approached to within a few rods that they discovered he was very young, scarcely more than a boy, and that he was an

to a Boer than an outlander or with lander—alien. He feels that their coming into the country threatens his institutions, and that the very object of their coming is wrong. The treasures of the earth belong to the earth, and should not be wrested away. The bustle and desire for change, for wealth, for investigating, even the progressive ideas of these outsiders are causes for suspicion and dislike. So when a cherry "Hellel" came from the wayfarer their answer was but a gruff and unintelligible grunt.

All this time the train was moving forward, but slowly, for oxen are plodding travelers. The boy was obliged to pause for the animals to pass, and he watched the long straggling line with the interest of a newcomer. After the cattle and sheep and their guard came the creaking, unwieldy wagons, with their inspanned oxen. Beside the first of these wagons rode a large, broad faced man whose white hair and air of authorify proclaimed him the head of the family. As he came opposite the boy stepped forward.

"Hello," he called again cheerfully. The man looked down at him, his face hardening, but he stopped.

"Well," he said harshly, "what do you want? Isn't it a little strange for a boy to be crossing the velut without a horse?"

"Oh, I don't know," the boy answer-

"Oh, I don't know," the boy answered carelessly. "I walked up from the coast three months ago., You see, I didn't have money enough for a horse and a good outfit, and I needed the outfit most. Besides, I was raised on a farm and am used to walking. A man I met carried my outfit to the mines, and I pegged on behind."

"And now you are going back home empty handed?" the Boer asked, sarcastically.

"No, indeed," quickly. "I didn't come here for fun. I'm going to college some time, and that takes money; and I've got half a dozen brothers and sisters who are planning for different things. It was easiest for me to leave so all of them put in their savings to-ward my expenses. Of course I don't expect to get rich," frankly, "but I shall work hard to take back enough to get us all a good start."
The Boer grunted.

The Boer grunted.

"Why are you going back, then, without your outfit?" he demanded.

"Got to have something to eat," the boy answered easily. "I went to the mines first, but the only opening was to work for somebody else or to buy a claim at a fabulous price, so I shouldered my outfit and struck off prospecting. I kept it up three weeks, and now," his eyes flashing eagerly into the grim ones above him, "I believe I've found a spot that will turn me in a lot of money. But I'm out of provisions of money. But I'm out of provisions and must go back after a supply. I don't suppose you have anylyou would sell?

"No," shortly, "but where's your out-

"Oh, I've concealed that in the sand I guess it'll be all right. Anyway there was nothing else to do. But I didn't stop you to talk about myself," coloring a little. "I wanted to say that your cattle are awful thirsty. At home we would drop everything to furnish such cattle with water quiek."

The Boer's face relaxed somewhat.

the Boer said. "My teams have not had water in three days, and God knows what may happen if the next river bed is like this one and the last."

The boy's face paied suddenly.

"The river dry," he gasped. "Why, I ounted on getting water there. I've only just enough with me to last one Then he forgot himself in concern for the cattle. "You must turn back toward the place I've found," he cried authoritatively; "it's only five or six miles away. There's a hole in the river bed that has water, and it's thirty yards or more across and several feet deep. It will be enough to supply your herds for some weeks. And beyond it are three or four miles of good grazing where the soil has not yet became dry. If you keep on this course the cattle will all perish."

The Boer had straightened up, preparatory to riding on, but at this he turned sharply.

"Water," he cried, "and plenty of it."
He raised his hand to his mouth and called to the men in front. One of them rode back. To him he gave a quick, peremptory order. Then he turned back to the boy.
"Do you understand what you have done?" he demanded. "This place you have discovered will need water to work it, and if we use that, as we doubtless shall, you will lose all the benefit of your discovery for this sea-

The boy threw back his head as though to ward off the insinuation. "The cattle need the water more than the land," he returned. "If the water gone when I return with the visions, I can go and prospect so where else, and perhaps come back home would not want me to put by money at the expense of suffering." The Boer leaned down and held out his hand.

"It is well," he said simply. "You will go back to the basin with us. We do not sell provisions, but we have plenty which we will give you. And it may be," with a friendly twinkle ban-lshing the last trace of hardness from his eyes, "that we will be able to ad-vance the success of your object here."

"Chamois" Skins.
Charles C. Druedling has written an Charles C. Druedling has written an article in the Journal of Pharmacy on chamois skins. The commercial article of that name, he says, is really oil tanned sheep or lamb skin lining. The supply of skins from the chamois animal is very limited. Enough could not be obtained in a year to supply the United States for more than a single day. He made special inquiry on a visit to Switzerland about the annual crop of the chamois skins and ascertained that from 5,000 to 6,000 skins crop of the chamois skins and ascertained that from 5,000 to 6,000 skins would be a fair average yearly crop. This skin is heavier than the skin of the sheep or lamb, also much coarser. For strength and durability the chamois skin is preferable, but for ordinary use and appearance the oil tonned nary use and appearance the oil tanned sheepskin lining would in most in-stances be preferred.
