Experiences of Several European Cities with Different Paving Materials.

Paris was formerly paved with cubical blocks of sandstone in the style commonly known as the Belgian. The primary reason for the substitution of asphalt was political; the populace found the paving stones very handy for barricades. Wood pavement, stone and asphalt are all in general use in Paris now. The former is like the Nicholson block so popular a few years ago in many American cities, but it is more carefully selected and better laid in Paris. The main objections to it are that it becomes spongy with use, wears away rapidly, holds water, and in a state of decay is insalubrious. Its good qualities are facility of construction, stillness, easy traction, and a firm foothold to horses; and in Paris and other European cities where it is well laid it stands next to asphalt in popular favor.

In London the macadam road, granstands next to asphalt in popular favor.

In London the macadam road, granite blocks bedded in concrete, wood pavements and asphalt are all in use. The macadam, as on the Thames embankment, is cheap, smooth and good for the horses' feet; but it is dusty in dry weather and muddy in wet. The granite pavement in London is smoother and better laid than any American stone paving, and stands wear better than anything else; but it is noisy and difficult to clean. The wood pavements more recently laid in London are of rectangular blocks sawed from fir planks, eight inches by six and three thick, with a strip of felt between each row. The objections are those already noted, and they apply to all wood pavements. The London people prefer the asphalt to all other forms. They use the Swiss or Sicilian mastic, mixed with gravel, or oftener with sand, and laid about two inches thick over concrete on a carefully prepared roadway. The best costs in London from $3 to $4 a square yard; and the annual expense of keeping it in perfect condition does not average more than ten cents a yard. The wear of the surface is exceeding-

The wear of the surface is exceedingly slow, being only half that of wood or macadam. It is easily kept clean, and long continued observations show that horses fall on it as rarely as on stone that norses fall on it as rarely as on stone.

The experience of Berlin is likewise in favor of asphalt. That city is paved with stone and asphalt, the stone blocks a little too broad, but well laid and carefully kept in order, and the asphalt prepared much as in Paris and London—clean, wholesome, silent, and easy for horses, vehicles and their occupants. Professor Newberry notes that the most trouble from horses slipping on asphalt occurs in cities like Berlin, where part of the streets are paved with stone. The shoes are worn smooth in the stone streets, and in the asphalt streets in wet weather the animals go down.

Brussels and the other Belgian cities have only the pavement which takes Brussels and the other Belgian cities have only the pavement which takes its name from that country. The blocks are carefully dressed and of a uniform size, and the surface is much smoother than in New York streets, and more easily kept clean. Professor Newberry noticed one feature in the Belgian streets which is worth mentioning. At the end of every piece of curbstone a shallow furrow is cut out, into which the projecting angle of the next stone fits, thus tying the curbstones together so that one cannot move without the other.—New York Sun.

A Profitable Bald Head.

There is one man here in town in whom there is no money for the Sutherland sisters. He is a real estate man and he believes in a bald head. The other day a friend noticed his absence of hair and asked him why he did not take something for it. "My boy," he replied, that baldness is worth $7,000 to me, at a careful calculation in my business. You notice that my face is smooth and very youthful looking, and that I never wear a hat or cap in the office, no matter how severe the weather. I have cultivated this baldness because it ages me in appearance. Had I a luxuriant head of hair people would hesitate before intrusting their property to me, thinking that I was too young to handle it. They see my bald spot and think I'm well along in years. No, sir. That bald spot is my mascot. I would not part with it." "You couldn't very well," retorted the friend as he withdrew, leaving the real estate man alone with his chronic cold in the head, contracted from undue exposure.—Chicago Herald.

A correspondent in Halifax, Nova Scotia, who often sends The Free Press a good thing, forwards a very curious verdict that was given by a coroner's jury in Nova Scotia the other week. Jane Bagnell committed suicide, and the jury brought in the following verdict: "That the deceased, Jane Bagnell, not having the fear of God before her eyes, and seduced by the instigation of the devil, did, and voluntarily, cut her throat with a razor while laboring under a fit of temporary insanity."

Charles Dickens had a rather poor opinion of crowner's quest law, but it is doubtful if any of the London coroners' juries ever brought in as mixed up a verdict as the above.—Detroit Free Press. Staples, Origin of Spinning.

Spinning originated in Hindostan, as it was known there at the most distant period. It appears in the illuminated missals of the Fourteenth century, but only among the leading population, being made by spinster maidens of rank. The bulk of the spinning was by the distaff, which is still used in some parts of the continent of Europe today. Among English speaking people that survived the ladies of the flax wheel, which still continues, there was spun from tussock cone flax which was held upon the distaff at one end of the machine.—New York Telegram.
