Never Again

Dear Sir .- Realizing that the northern districts are absolutely lost to him, Sir Edward Morris, it appears, is moving heaven and earth in a mad endeavour to rekindle the extinct Tory spark on the West Coast. But judging from the icy recentions he has received all up and down the coast his chances are even more hopeless in the west than they are in the north No matter what he does by the way of roadbuilding, wharf-building, or any other sort of building, he will never again get back the people's con fidence. They realize he has been weighed in the balance and found sadly wanting. All his gab and bluster are of no avail as people don' take notice of anything he says, but are very keen and much alive on what he omits to say. They are not so green as the great bluffer thinks, and they mean not to be gulled and codded by him again. Outside of office-holders and heelers the whole coast are bitterly anti-Morris and no one realizes that fact better than Morris himself. His visiting the districts has done far more to estrange the people than it has to draw them towards him, because their eyes are now wide open and they can see him just as he is. The difference between what the people thought of Morris four years ago and what they think of him now is immense. All the great qualities he from the liver and carry out of the then appeared to posses are now look- sysem all the constipated waste mated upon as negative quantities.
