ongst the beautiful lantern slides shown were several "before and after pictures," illustrating the possibilities for physical and mental evelopment of the children of the coast who are given a chance. One of these pictures showed two abin, who one day announced they wanted to see the visitor in their home, Dr. Wilfrid T. Grenfell, and his dogs. But they couldn't see him under any circumstances, having een born sightless. The hero of the Labrador, thinking it a shame that such bright little girls should grow up in darkness, took them to the school for the blind in Halifax. The next picture revealed two happymaidens budding into intelligent, well-cared for young womanhood, employed on the handiwork with which they have been taught to make a living.
