Watch your words! Really we have to be tremendously careful about them Words once said, and, worse still, once written, can nevermore be taken back. Often at a moment of impatience or over-bubbling spirits, or ill-temper, wa say an inconsiderate word. We may only at times be absent-minded, yet the inadvertent word lives on, rankles in another's mind until it festers like a wound. There is a way of putting words together like wrong colors, that makes them insupportable, unforgivable. They hurt-and the hurt cannot be cured. I am the most ungrudging of mortals, yet certain words said to me stick in my mind and I cannot, try as may, get rid of them. Kind words, thank God, have the same particularity. I can still remember words said to me when I was a child-encouraging, approving words, which made the world seem like a garden full of flowers. Each daughter had her trials, her battles which she was facing as best she could-but the hard, disciplinary letters did not help. A kind, understanding letter would have been an almost heavenly boon. Even if couched in measured words, advice, warning or even reproof would have been patiently listened to.

None of us remember enough the strength of words. A thousand times
